THE FOLLY OF SIN (Five Parts—March).—Dr. Hatton and Dr. Felix, two young physicians, are working to produce a serum for the cure of cancer. Dr. Felix secretly envies Dr. Hatton's personality and social conquests, while the latter is jealous of the other's more advanced work. Hatton conceives a plan to divert his colleague's mind from his work by getting him interested in society and a charming orphan, Margaret.

Lieutenant Vincent, Margaret's brother and guardian, is soon transferred to another city and Margaret is left alone with an old aunt. Dr. Hatton maneuvers so that Felix spends most of his time with Margaret, while he diligently applies himself to his work. Marguerite's infatuation for Felix results disastrously, and Dudley, Lieutenant's friend, goes to inform him of the improper relations between his sister and the physician. Vincent obtains leave of absence and sets out to defend his sister's honor. Meanwhile Margaret has written Felix about her condition, to which he replies with a check. This she indignantly returns to him.

Upon his return Lieutenant Vincent challenges Dr. Felix to a duel, in which the former is fatally wounded. Felix is sent to prison for six months, and the night of his release Dr. Hatton, as Mephistopheles, takes him to a mask ball. In the midst of revelry Dr. Felix thinks how cruelly he has treated Margaret, and he goes to the hospital in search of her, where he learns that she and her child both have died. Overwhelmed by sorrow he returns to his rooms, where he reads of Dr. Hatton's discovery of the Cancer cure. Too late he realizes that Dr. Hatton's duplicity has ruined his career. As life no longer appeals to him he takes poison and his dying eyes behold a vision of Mephistopheles with the face of Dr. Hatton, and seems to hear his mocking words: "I have superseded you. Your folly achieved my triumph."

GEORGE KLEINE.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER NO. 8 "JUST IMAGINATION"—(April 19.).—Musty is enjoying a nap in the middle of a country road when along comes Silly Billy with his wheelbarrow full of hay. He loads Musty into his one-man-power pushmobile, covers him up with hay and resumes the journey. Pretty soon he passes a well and stops for a drink. While he is drinking, Musty awakens and departs. Billy refreshed by his draught, is very strong, and when he seizes the handles of his lightened vehicle, it flies into the air, descending upon the head of the unlucky Musty and completely knocking him out. Musty is discovered by some passing soldiers and interned as a suspicious character, but when he sees that his guards pass through the grating of his cell by merely bending aside the flexible bars, our noble young hero loses no time in making his escape. Tired of aimless wandering, Musty seats himself on a convenient stump and wishes for a good "soft" job. A fairy tramp suddenly appears before him and leads him to a huge signboard which announces that Dr. Hickory and Dr. Nut are looking for a refined young man as a subject in their experiments with the power of imagination. After mysteriously changing clothes with a tastily attired clothier's dummy, Musty gets the job.

Dr. Hickory and Dr. Nut, assisted by their charming young lady helper, put Musty through a fine course of sprouts. He is seated before a splendid dinner, but when he turns his head the plates become empty as if by magic. The two doctors congratulate Musty on his splendid appetite. "You've eaten it all," they say. "Now drink," referring him to a punch bowl which fills automatically with tempting liquid before his very eyes. He fills one small glass and sees the punch bowl empty. While gazing in wonderment at the bowl, his glass changes to a flatiron, much to his disgust.

He is put to bed and immediately awakened, told that he has slept twelve hours and that it is now time for breakfast. Delighted, he takes his place at the table and seizes a coffee pot which suddenly takes on the appearance of a live goose. He is then treated to an imaginary game of pool, in which he shows great dexterity, and a psychological sleigh ride, which amuses him hugely, but nearly freezes him to death. Then Dr. Hickey tells him he ill show him his future wife. His hair is carefully combed and he is hit over the head with a stuffed club. While he is semi-conscious the imagination specialists urge him to look through a pair of field glasses. Through the lenses he sees a vision of his old friend Dippy Mary, busily engaged in massaging a lawn with curry comb and brush. Then Dr. Hickory hits him over the head with an axe, and when Musty awakes he finds himself in the road beside the shattered remains of Silly Billy's wheelbarrow.

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

THE SHADOW OF DOUBT (Equitable—Five Parts—April 10).—The cast: Ned (Carlyle Blackwell); Alice (Jean Sheiby); John Randolph (George Anderson); Ruth (Lillian Allen); Henry Collins (Frank Beamish). Directed by Ray Physioc.

John, eight years old, is adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Randolph. Before leaving, John gives a beautiful miniature of his mother to the matron for safe keeping until Ned, four years younger, finds a new home. Fifteen years later John is admitted to the bar in England, a well educated, refined young man, while Ned is a shipping clerk in a wholesale house.

Several years later John comes to America with his wife, Alice, and establishes law offices in New York. Ned has worked diligently but has never gotten ahead. Trying to make both ends meet, he becomes desperate as his wife, Ruth, is an invalid. He comes under the influence of two crooks, and when he cannot raise money for his wife's necessities, goes with them to crack a safe. They are caught, Ned's plea for leniency is ignored by the judge, and he is sent to jail.

Alice Randolph is interested in model tenements and John contributes to the fund. When she tries to interest him in the uplift of criminals, he refuses, saying money spent on jailbirds is wasted. Ned, released, starts over again under the name of Henry Andrews, but his jail record follows him and he cannot get work. His wife is failing rapidly and nothing but an operation costing $1,000 can save her.

One of Randolph's clients, Henry Collins, is a subtle beast of prey where women are concerned. Alice has learned of Ned's plight and determines to help him. John refuses to lend her money for the assistance of a man he knows is a criminal. Collins offers the money, which Alice refuses. Haunted by the thought of the tenement sufferer, she goes to Collin's apartment and secures the loan. Ruth's operation is successful and Alice aids Ned in getting employment with John's business partner, asking him to shield Ned's past, and tell John that he came well recommended.

Collins has evil intentions towards Alice. When he hears that John is going to leave town that afternoon, he resolves to visit Alice that night. Rushing out of his office, John takes the wrong raincoat, noticing the mistake as he reaches the depot. Placing his hand in the coat pocket he brings out the miniature picture of his mother, which he has given his brother Ned at the orphanage. Ned puts on John's railcoat, and finding in it John's deed and papers, rushes to the house to give John his coat.

John comes home and finds Ned near his safe. As he attempts to conceal himself, John believes him to have come there to rob him and has him arrested. Later, when Alice tells him that the man he knew as Henry Andrews is his own brother Ned, John goes to the station and brings Ned back. Meanwhile, Collins comes to visit Alice, who is terrified and at his mercy, he being in a drunken condition. He goes direct to her bedroom, and after a struggle, she wards him off, running out of her room just as John comes in. At the sight of Collins, John is infuriated and a fight ensues. Ned intervenes just in time to save Collin's life. After a thorough explanation, John understands and forgives everything, becoming reconciled with his wife and brother.

HUMAN DRIFTWOOD (Peerless—Five Parts—April 10).—The cast: Robert Hendricks (Robert Warwick); Velma (Frances Nelson); Myra (Leonore Harris); Father Harrigan (Alec B. Francis); Lief Bergson (Albert S. Hart). Directed by Emile Chautard.

Robert Hendricks, who is a rich young bachelor, becomes infatuated with Myra, a beautiful, but evil, dancer of a New York dancing resort. He invites her to his apartment, where his attorney calls unexpectedly. Hendricks sends Myra in an adjoining room and receives the lawyer, who comes to tell him that he is leaving for Europe and wishes to turn over $20,000 in unregistered securities, as the balance of the estate of Hendricks' father, of which he was trustee.

Myra pricked her ears at this and, peeking through the portieres, saw Hendricks place the securities in a concealed wall-safe. After the departure of the lawyer, Myra comes out of seclusion and Hendricks tells her to remain in his rooms until his return, as he wishes to speak to his broker at once regarding the bonds.

The moment Hendricks leaves the apartment, Myra phoned to her pals a band of crooks, telling them to hurry there for a rich haul. They were just taking the bonds out of the safe as Hendricks returned. In the fight that ensued, one of the crooks, Myra's lover, was accidentally killed by Myra's own hand. When Hendricks realized the full significance of the situation, rather than turn the girl over to the police, magnanimously allows the girl to escape.

The years pass and Hendricks becomes a serious reformer, forceful and effective. He is sent for as the head of his society to clean up the fearfully immoral conditions prevailing in an Alaskan mining camp. Unknown to Hendricks, Myra is the sinister influence of the camp, where she conducts a dance hall. The mystery of the place is the presence there of a beautiful unsullied young girl known as Velma. She is supposed to be Myra's niece. Despite the vicious conditions surrounding her, Velma is innocent of evil, with the pure heart of a young girl.

Hendricks falls in love with her, but Myra has already promised the girl to the bully of the camp, a huge, uncouth ruffian, who has "struck it rich" and who can pay Myra's price for Velma. Father Harrigan comes to the assistance of the good little girl and is pleased to learn of her true love for Hendricks. However, to prevent Hendricks marrying the girl, Myra reveals her identity to him, who hitherto had not suspected it, and declares that Velma is his own daughter, the offspring of their illicit relationship years before.

Driven half mad by the hideous lie, Hendricks sets out in pursuit of the bully who has carried off Velma after a desperate fight in Myra's dance hall in which the woman is fatally wounded. Eventually he comes to grips with the ruffian. The bully goes to a fearful death, while fate unravels Hendricks' tangled love and he gathers Velma in his arms after her true identity was revealed by the dying Myra.

THE LOST BRIDEGROOM (Famous Players—Five Parts—March 20).—The cast: Bertie Joyce (John Barrymore); Dorothy Hardin (Katherine Harris); Mrs. Amelia Hardin (Ida Darling); Madge McQuirk (June Dale); Black McQuirk (Hardie Kirkland); Slim Denny (Edward Sturgis); Crooks (Jack Dillon and Tammany Young).

Bertie Joyce is a young society chap who is struck on the head by thugs while returning from his bachelor dinner on the eve of his marriage to Dorothy Hardin. His memory completely obliterated by the blow, Joyce wanders down to the river front, falls asleep on a wharf and tumbles into the river. Of course Joyce was in evening clothes at the time of the hold-up and the thieves have divested him of his coat and overcoat.

When Joyce scrambles out of the water, he removes his dress shirt, wrings it out, finds his tall hat, and ambles into the first saloon with the shirt over his arm. There is a mild sensation in the place when the stranger enters and the inhabitants—it is the headquarters of a band of thieves—are all for throwing him out. But the proprietor's daughter comes to the rescue and the stranger is fed and clothed. Then it is decided that he would make an excellent gentleman burglar, adding "class" to the gang, so he is trained in the art of burgling.

The papers are full of the disappearance of young Joyce and the descriptions of the vast assortment of wedding presents over which the near-bride is pictured as weeping. It looks like a rich haul to the gang and Joyce, his identity never for a moment suspected, is sent with two others to rob his own fiancee's home. They get inside the house, and when Dorothy interrupts the work, Joyce instinctively shields her from the blow of one of the crooks.

The thug attacks Joyce and the two men engage in a desperate battle during the course of which they fall down a flight of eighteen steps. Joyce lands on the bottem at the foot of the stairs and is stunned. The police arrive and a doctor is immediately summoned for Joyce. He declares that a very minor operation will completely restore Joyce's memory, and when it has been performed, Joyce has no knowledge of his excursion into the underworld, but believes that he is simply recovering from the hilarity of his bachelor dinner. If the instructions of the doctor have been carried out, he still believes so, for Dorothy, whom he has married, has solemnly promised never to tell.

THE SALESLADY (Famous Players—Five Parts—March 23).—The cast: Helen (Hazel Dawn); Bruce (Irving Cummings); Lizzie (Dorothy Rogers); Bruce's father (Clarence Handysides); Officer Burke (Arthur Morrison).

Poverty forces Helen Shirley, a country lass, into New York in search of a living. Shy and unsosphisticated, Helen falls an easy victim of the notorious band which preys upon young girls and she is easily induced to go to a boarding house which is in reality the headquarters of the gang.

Failing to find employment, she decides to give violin lessons and while practicing, she hears the agonized cough of a girl in the next room. Investigating, she discovered that the girl is in last stages of tuberculosis and that only instant removal to the mountains will save her. Moved by compassion, Helen impulsively sells the beautiful dog which is her only source of amusement and contrives to set the girl on the path to recovery.

Practically penniless as the result of her kindness, Helen is ejected from her room but young Bruce Kerwin, a wealthy New Yorker, who has been attracted by her beauty, learns of her plight and induces one of the other girls in the house to "loan" Helen some money.

Through the efforts of Burke, a mounted policeman and his sweetheart, the girl obtains employment in a department store where the advances of a floorwalker annoy her. When she repulses him, he contrives to have her discharged, but when she tells her story to the matron, she is taken to the manager and reinstated.

The floodwalker, finding that Helen and young Bruce are going together, informs the boy's father that he is interested in a shop girl. In the row which follows between father and son, Bruce leaves his home and then marries Helen. Soon after he is injured and Helen decides to try her luck on the stage. She is a tremendous success and scores a great hit, captivating, among others, the elder Kerwin, who does not suspect that she is his daughter-in-law. The old gentleman meets Helen—she, of course, is aware of his identity—and the girl adroitly wins his heart before revealing her identity.

AUDREY (Famous Players—Five Parts—March 27).—The cast: Audrey (Pauline Fredericks); Lord Haward (Charles Waldron); Evelyn Byrd (Margarete Christians); Jean Hugon (E. Fernandez); Mrs. Darden (Helen Lindrith); Mr. Darden (Henry Hallam); John Byrd (Jack Clark).

Audrey, the only survivor of an Indian raid, is found by Marmaduke Haward, a young Englishman, who adopts her and returns to England with her as his ward. He entrusts her to the care of Gideon Darden, a minister. A short time later Haward returns to England upon receipts of news that he has been left a title and great fortune.

Years have passed and Audrey, a carefree child of the woods, who has grown to womanhood, unknowingly attracts the admiration of Jean Hugon, a trapper. Hugon attempts to woo Audrey, who laughingly shuns him. Innocent of her physical charms, as she roams the woods, she lures Hugon who attempts to enforce his affections upon her. She becomes afraid of him and retreats.

Haward returns from England with the title of Lord and Darden, who has neglected Audrey, gives her suitable clothing. Haward's interest in Audrey grows until Lady Evelyn, his sweetheart, discards him. Audrey attends a social function in company with Lord Haward, and Lady Evelyn's brother insults her. He fights a duel with Lord Haward in which the latter is wounded. Next Sunday the minister denounces Audrey and she is dispossessed and driven away from home. Lord Haward, learning the news, rescues her and attempts to re-establish her, which results in a better understanding between Lord Haward and his ward.

THE SOWERS (Lasky—Five Parts—March 30).—The cast: Karin Dolokhof (Blanche Sweet); Prince Paul Alexis (Thomas Meighan); the Princess Tanya (Mabel Van Buren); Count Egor Strannik (Ernest Joy); Boris Dolokhof (Theodore Roberts); Chief of Secret Police (Horace Carpenter); The Peddler (Raymond Hatton); the Tramp (Harold Howard).

Headed by a young nobleman, the Russian League of Freedom determines to free the peasants from oppression by the government. Prince Paul Alexis is in love with Karin Dolokhof, daughter of the chancellor. Both are working for the league.

Shortly after they announce their engagement the prince receives word from the Czar that he must marry the Princess Tanya, for political reasons. Upon receiving the command the prince expresses his intention to leave Russia with Karin Dolokhof, but she reminds him of his allegiance to the freedom league. Princess Tanya is in love with Count Egor Strannik, but under pressure, she discards the count and marries the unwilling prince.

Through espionage, the chief of the secret police learns of the prince's affiliation with the freedom league and as Prince Alexis and his wife, Princess Tanya, hold a reception, at which the government heads are present, he sends Count Egor Strannik to secure the evidence. The count, who is still in love with Princess Tanya, tries to force his love upon her, and as he holds her in his arms, Prince Alexis discovers them and beats the count with a knout. For revenge the count, with a band of followers, forces the prince to reveal the hiding place of some important league papers.

THE HEART OF PAULA (Pallas—Five Parts—April 3).—The cast: Paula Figueroa (Lenore Ulric); Claire Pachmann (Velma Leller); Stephen Pachmann (Jack Livingstone); Bruce McLean (Forrest Stanley); Emiliano Pachero (Howard Davies); Mr. Adams (Herbert Standing).

Stephen Pachmann, a young mining engineer, is sent to Mexico to examine a mine. His young wife is very apprehensive and her fears are shared by her brother, Bruce McLean. Just as Pachmann is about to enter Mexico, McLean overtakes him and persuades him to give up the trip for the sake of his wife. McLean takes Pachmann's passports and enters Mexico.

He soon meets Paula, and the girl falls madly in love with the American. This arouses the intense jealousy of Pacheco, Mexican bandit, who finds that Paula loathes him. Pacheco manages to capture McLean and holds him in a mountain wilderness for ransom. News that "Stephen" is being held by the bandit is flashed to the United States and Claire starts to rescue her brother.

The bandit tells Paula that Pachmann (McLean) has a wife and that she is on her way to buy her husband's release. The Spanish girl waits and sees the supposed wife greet McLean with kisses. She is furious until she learns that McLean is a brother to the woman. Pacheco threatens to kill McLean after he had attempted to escape, but Paula saves him by offering herself to the guerilla leader. That night she plans revenge, but Fate changes her decree.

THE RACE (Lasky—Five Parts—April 6).—The cast: Grace Vandyke (Anita King); James Grayson, Sr. (Robert Bradbury); Jimmy Grayson, Jr. (Victor Moore); Andrew Vandyke (William Dale); Mrs. Jefferson (Mrs. Louis McCord); Mr. Anderson (Ernest Joy); mechanic (Horace B. Carpenter).

After losing $10,000 in gambling, Jimmy Grayson, son of a wealthy automobile manufacturer, is disowned by his father. He was standing on a street corner a few minutes later when an automobile driven by a beautiful young, feminine chauffeur struck and slightly injured him. The owner of the automobile, a kind hearted elderly woman, secures employment for Young Grayson as a garage mechanic and when the young woman chauffeur learns that he has no home she takes him to her father's house.

Her father is a clerk in the office of Grayson, the auto manufacturer. The younger Grayson and Vandyke design a new carburetor and in order to make a number of models, Vandyke steals $9,000 from the firm. Grace, his daughter, learns of her father's crime and in an effort to protect him, she accepts an offer of an automobile firm to drive a machine across the continent. She is instructed to beat the Grayson car, which is making a similar trip, but she does not know that it is being driven by Jimmy. Young Grayson is unaware that he is racing against the plucky girl.

There are many thrilling scenes in the transcontitental run. The race ends when Grace, given the wrong route, drives over an embankment. Jimmy finds her, hears her story and decides to go to jail. He deliberately breaks his machine and is towed into New York by Grace's car.

THE LOVE MASK (Lasky—Five Parts—April 13).—The cast: Kate Kenner (Cleo Ridgley); Silver Spurs (Earle Fox); Dan Deering (Wallace Reid); Jim (Robert Flemming); Estrella (Dorothy Abril).

Forced through the death of her parents to make her own way in the world, Kate Kenner, a girl of the west, prospects. In her daily toil she discovers "virgin" gold, which is taken from her by unscrupulous miners. She enlists the aid of Dan Deering, the sheriff and blacksmith, and in Deering's absence, Silver Spurs, a bandit, enters Deering's shop, sees a reward for his capture, steals the sheriff's watch and flees.

Deering's intervention is resented by the miners who fire upon him. During the affray, Silver Spurs appears and aids the sheriff and returns his watch. During the altercation, one of the miners files claim to Kate's mine and she is dispossessed. As the thieves are about to ship some of the mined gold away, Kate impersonates Silver Spurs and is about to reclaim her own, when Silver Spurs also appears in quest of the treasure.

The bandit concedes her the first chance which proves unsuccessful and in the affray the real Silver Spurs is wounded. He is traced to Kate's cabin where the sheriff finds a spur, believed to be his, but which is Kate's property. The sheriff arrests her and she is about to be hanged when the bandit sends a note, acquitting Kate, and telling of the theft of the gold from a saloon where it was left for safety.

THE ETERNAL GRIND (Famous Players—Five Parts—April 17).—The cast: Mary (Mary Pickford); Amy (Loretta Blake); Jane (Dorothy West); Owen (John Bowers); Ernest (Robert Cain); James Wharton (J. Albert Hall).

Three sisters, Mary, Amy and Jane, live together in dire poverty. Mary has assumed the responsibility of caring for her other sisters, Amy, a moral weakling, and Jane, a chronic invalid, by working in a factory owned by James Wharton. Ernest, the worthless son of Wharton, establishes Amy in an apartment of her own and the worry and anguish which Amy's terrible mistake causes her sisters result in a complete breakdown on the part of Jane.

If Jane is not sent away, the doctor gives Mary no hope for her recovery. In her desperation, Mary makes a direct appeal to the elder Wharton, but is summarily dismissed from his home. Ernest, however, sees Mary and attempts to win her as he did Amy. The latter's suspicions aroused by Ernest's indifference, she arms herself and follows him to see who the new charmer might be. The sacrifices which she has made for Jane have necessitated Mary's removal from the old rooms to more humble quarters. So when Amy follows Ernest into a tenement house and confronts him with a revolver as he takes another girl in his arms, she is stunned to find that the girl is her own sister Mary.

In a tremendous scene, Mary takes in the situation and, seizing the revolver from Amy's hand, she holds Ernest at bay while a minister is obtained. Then she slides behind a curtain and holds the gun at Ernest's back while he and Amy go through the marriage ceremony.

Mary, meanwhile, has found a new and deep interest in Owen Wharton. Ernest's very manly brother. Owen is deeply in sympathy with the factory workers and even goes so far as to take a position in the plant under another name. When the rotten factory floor caves in, Owen is caught in the debris and seriously injured. Mary finds him and assists in saving his life. Of course, the father finally relents and changes his views on the subject of factory construction and of daughters-in-law, but it is not until Mary has fought a few more battles.

ALSACE (April).—Mr. Orbey, a wealthy manufacturer of Thann, has decided to remain in the newly annexed country, after the war of 1871. He is the champion of the struggle between the Alsatians and their oppressors, which began with the first day of the annexation. Every occasion is taken advantage of to instil into the hearts of the Alsatians the love of their lost Fatherland, which they are sure will be restored to them some day. But how different is the attitude of the Teuton immigrants, both military officers and civilians, who remain isolated in the midst of an unflinching population.

The festival of the patron Saint of Thann is the occasion for all the faithful Alsatians to gather for a rustic dance. Pleasure and joy reign supreme. Suddenly a group of intoxicated Germans comes to disturb the peaceful throng. Mme. Orbey was dancing with her husband when an officer, pushing aside the crowd, impudently comes to ask her to dance with him. She refuses, and he moves to snatch her away from the arms of her husband, who slaps him in the face. The struggle becomes general, blows fly all around, the opponents roll in the dust, and the feast ends in bloodshed.

Mr. Orbey, wounded, returns home, where he is made the object of many sympathetic calls. Excited at the thought of the incidents of the day those present are filled with an overwhelming love for their lost Fatherland. Their hearts are filled with joy when Mme. Orbey starts playing the "Marseillaise." Outside the patrol hears the forbidden song. The soldiers come upstairs and arrest Mr. Orbey. He is sentenced to be expelled from Alsace, and he leaves with his wife in the midst of great popular excitement. Mr. and Mrs. Orbey have left in Thann their son, James, who, with his uncle, Mr. Honneck, takes charge of his father's manufacturing plant. Having been compelled to bow down to the law of the oppressor, James has had to do his military service in Germany, a very bitter sacrifice, because Rene, his cousin Susie's fiancee, has crossed the frontier to serve France.

Having been admitted into the home of Mr. Schwartz, a wealthy manufacturer, and having been attracted by the charm of his daughter, Marguerite, James gradually falls in love with the girl. His father and mother are still exiles in France, and his uncle is the only relative who tries hard to make the young man forget his unfortunate infatuation. But Mr. Honneck's efforts are futile and not knowing what more to do, he communicates his distress to Mme. Orbey, who finally secures permission to return to Alsace. His mother pleads with him to give up the girl, and he consents. But his sacrifice makes him desperately ill, and his mother finally has to get Marguerite. The young people are married. More than ever arises in the young family the irreconcilable race antagonism. The conflicts are continuous, and James' heart is torn between the love for his wife and his filial devotion.

July, 1914: James' position has become intolerable when suddenly there comes the most dreaded news. Germany is mobilizing. The long awaited day has arrived and France is making ready to enter upon a campaign by which she hopes to tear out of the book of history the page written forty-four years ago. Young Rene has decided not to leave for the front without kissing his sweetheart once more, and braving all dangers, he succeeds in crossing the frontier, hiding under his chauffeur's coat the French uniform.

He meets Susie at the Orbeys, but having been found out and denounced, he is about to be arrested as a spy when, thanks to James' devotion and presence of mind, he succeeds in escaping and in reaching his post. Events follow each other quickly. Mme. Orbey has made ready to leave for France, with her son, whose place is in the ranks of the defenders of freedom and justice. Time is pressing and as her son does not appear, Mme. Orbey rushes to his house, while James, dressed in civilian clothes, steals away to fulfill what he believes to be his "other duty."

James passes through agitated groups of those who are responding to the order of German mobilization and suddenly stops. Someone has just cried "Death to the French!" The generous blood which runs in his veins cannot lie, and facing the enemy, he cries "Long live France!" He is immediately attacked, and badly wounded he crawls to his house to fall dead in the arms of his mother.

The dawn of the "Great Day" has come. All over the great plain the villages captured by the French are still burning. The French enter Thann. Mme. Orbey, in mourning, staggers towards the tomb of her son, her beloved James, and cries, "Rejoice, Rejoice, my son, the Frenche are here!"

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 24 (Mar. 24).—

Salonika—Unusual motion pictures from Salonika show the effects of an air raid made by aeroplanes of the Teuton forces. The wrecked buildings, some of which are still blazing; the captured aeroplanes and aviators, generals who have figured largely in the news from the eastern campaign are shown in these views.

London—Convalescent English soldiers enjoy the first heavy snowfall London has had in twelve years.

San Francisco—Forty-horse team drags a 60-ton cable up the hills of San Francisco.

Washington—An intimate picture of Representative Schall, of Minnesota, the new blind Congressman, shows him with a page who helps him about the capitol.

Marlin, Tex.—Manager McGraw puts the husky New York Giants through their paces at their training camp.

Washington—Boy scouts take part in field sports and render first aid to an injured companion.

New York—Costumes for street and formal wear from America's leading designers are shown in the Fashion Section.

Richmond, Cal.—Pullman coaches that have outlived their usefulness are dismantled and burned.

Columbus, New Mexico.—A base for the punitive expedition that has pushed its way into Mexico in pursuit of Francisco Villa is established at Columbus. Other soldiers are shown on the desert trail following the outlaw.

Krazy Kat longs to be a hero and save Ignatz Mouse, but Ignatz plays a joke and Krazy falls in a funny Herriman cartoon.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 26 (March 31).—On this release we are given views of the explosion of an arsenal at Fort De La Briche, Paris, France, in which fifty persons were killed. In another city of the same name (Paris) Texas, five thousand miles away, a fire swept through the town leaving hundreds homeless and a Hearst-Vitagraph camera man was there to take the lurid scene.

At Chicago, the high school pupils built portable officers' quarters which were photographed for the Hearst-Vitagraph, before they were shipped with compliments to General Frederick Funston.

In Salonika the troops of the Allies are shown rushing work on mighty defenses, the second United States cavalry are caught at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., just as they start for the Mexican border, while down at Aqua Prieta, Mexico, in search of the festive item, another Hearst-Vitagraph filmed Colonel Fierro and his Carranzaista soldiers en route to join the hunt for Villa.

New York and Paris fashions showing charming Easter conceits and cartoonist T. E. Powers' latest models of a Funnygraph entitled "Do You Know This Man," end this offering.

SALVATION JOAN (Vitagraph—Seven parts April 10.).—The cast: Joan Crawford (Edna May); "Bill" John Hilton (Harry T. Morey); Madeline Ellison (Dorothy Kelly); Robert Ellison, her husband (Donald Hall); Master Bobby Ellison (Bobby Connelly); Philip Ralston (L. Rogers Lytton). Written by Marguerite Bertsch. Produced by Wilfred North.

Salvation Joan is a society girl who wearies of the empty life of society when she realizes the suffering, misery and poverty that exists in the great city in which she lives. In spite of the opposition of friends and relatives she joins the Salvation Army, but conceals her identity. Joan is attracted by Bill, who she thinks, is one of a gang of rough characters of the saloon and gambling places, but who really has more sterling qualities of manhood concealed within him if they could be brought out.

In a fight started at a Salvation Army meeting by the rowdies, Bill comes to the rescue of Salvation Joan, in spite of the risk of great danger to himself. This wins the gratitude of Salvation Joan and the result is that Bill becomes a regular attendant at the Salvation Army services. It is hard to keep love and religion from mixing. As a society girl Salvation Joan had previously broken off her engagement to Phillip Balston because somehow she could not place confidence in him. This distrust was well borne out when Ralston's associations with gangsters was accidentally revealed to her one day when she chanced to discover him leaving a meeting with a crowd of them.

To promote his sinister ends, Ralston traps Madeline Ellison, sister of Joan and the wife of Ambassador Ellison, and threatens that if they expose him he would sandalize Madeline. The situation becomes more and more complicated and reaches its final climax when "Bill," after an evening of thrilling adventures, turns out to be a secret service man and arrests Ralston as a spy, saving the country from war. Ralston, in an attempt to escape, is shot and killed. "Bill's" heroism wins the heart of Salvation Joan, and both reveal their identity and vow that they love each other.

THE FLAMES OF JOHANNIS (Lubin—Five Parts—April 10).—The cast: Marika, a foundling, and Zirah, an old gypsy maid (Nance O'Neil); Mr. Vogel (George Clarke); Mrs. Vogel (Eleanor Barry); Gertrude (Ethel Tully); George (Victor Sutherland); Pastor Hoffner (Irving Dillon); Kate, a slave (Mrs. Carr); Paul, the handy man (James Cassady); Little George (Violet Axzell); Little Marika (Rosemary Carr). Scenario written by Herman Sudermann. Directed by Edgar Lewis.

The picture opens in Pennsylvania twenty-five years ago, during the winter of terrible drought. Vogel, the most prosperous farmer in the village, is called to the bedside of his only brother to take charge of the brother's child, George, four years of age. On his way home from the suicide's house, Vogel finds an old gypsy woman carrying an infant almost frozen to death. Vogel takes the infant home with him and the next day adopts it together with George. The old gypsy is paid a sum of money to give up all claim of the child on condition that she will not interfere in the future. She accepts and departs.

Marika and George are known in the town as the calamity children. Three years later, a daughter, Gertrude, is born to Vogel. Returning from the christening, Marika is suddenly seized by the old gypsy woman who caresses her. The old woman is driven off by the crowd but the incident makes an impression upon Marika's mind. Marika and George become childhood sweethearts, and when George is twelve years of age, he and Marika plant a little tree in the garden back of the house, and call it their sweetheart tree. Vogel, who oversees this, chides George for being so sentimentally silly, saying that he should be at work filling the grain bins. George resents Vogel's manner, and the latter becomes angry and then tells George how his father was a suicide who left Vogel to pay all his debts and bring up his son. George runs away, vowing that he will not return to the village until he can repay Vogel in full.

Years pass and Marika and Gertrude are grown to young womanhood. Marika, with the memory of George ever in her heart, learns that he has prospered and is about to return to the village. Vogel, who hears this news, decides that George is the man to marry his daughter, Gertrude. George returns, and is hailed with delight by all except Marika, who, actuated by a motive of gratitude because of all Vogel has done for her in the past, stifles the call of her own heart and keeps her love for George locked within her own breast. Later George questions Marika as to why she insists upon avoiding him, but she is evasive, and he, in a fit of pique, proposes marriage to Gertrude.

When she hears of this, Marika insists upon fitting up the new home which George and his future bride are to occupy in a neighboring village. This necessitates her making frequent trips at night, returning to her home the following day. On one of these trips Marika again meets the old gypsy woman, who seizes her and calls her her daughter. Marika rushes to her home and later, as she hears the family discussing the incident of meeting the gypsy years ago, she realizes for the first time that the old hag is her own mother.

It is St. John's eve, two days before the wedding of George and Gertrude, and Marika on this night is to make her last trip to the new home of George and Gertrude. The family have retired and George has remained up to keep Marika company until train time. As she realizes that George is soon to go out of her life forever, Marika is unable to restrain the pent-up passion of years, and she begs George to take her in his arms.

This action is seen through the window by the old gypsy, who realizes that from now on she can secure money from George to keep the facts of what took place from the public. As the day dawns George begs Marika to let him go to Vogel and tell his love for her, but she, knowing that the shock would kill Gertrude and break her foster parents' heart, refuses. Later she silently looks on with breaking heart as George and Gertrude are married.

During the wedding ceremony the old gypsy enters Vogel's house and is found by the returning guests in the cellar, intoxicated. She is arrested and taken to jail. Marika learns of this and goes at once to her mother, and finds her very ill. She dies in delirium. The next morning Pastor Hoffman, who has always loved Marika, comes to the cell and finds his beloved bending over the body of her mother. He takes her into his arms and she leaves the prison with him.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S BURLESQUE ON "CARMEN" (Essanay—Four parts—Apr. 10).—The cast: Darn Hosiery Don Jose (Charles Chaplin); Carmen (Edna Purviance); Toreador (John Rand); Second Officer (Feo White); The Uncle (Jack Henderson); Smuggler (Ben Turpin); Chiquita (May White); Tramp (Wesley Ruggles).

Lieutenant Darn Hosiery Don Jose in the opera is sent to a province in Spain to stop smuggling. The smugglers try to bribe him, but he steals their money so that they have nothing to bribe him with.

Carmen tempts him. He falls prey to her blandishments. A fellow officer also loves Carmen and he and Don Jose fight a duel in which the latter is victor. The other officer is killed, but shortly afterward decides to come back to life.

Don Jose flees, and inasmuch as he is no more in authority, Carmen runs away with a popular toreador. Don Jose follows her, stabs her, and then himself with a stage knife. While they are lying on the ground dead, the toreador makes Don Jose feel the toe of his boot, which quickly brings him to life, and the play ends with a laugh instead of the wonted tears.

MR. JACK'S ARTISTIC SENSE (No. 9 Vitagraph—April 17.).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Frank Daniels); His Wife (Rose E. Tapley); His Son (Arthur Cozine); Pazzini, Artist (Dave Burton); Dottie, Model (Marguerite Forrest). Written by Bruno Lessing. Director C. J. Williams.

Mr. Jack was never interested in things artistic until he discovered one Dottie, oh, so sweet! and an artist's model. Of course, Jack makes it his business to call at the studio as often as possible, to see a picture which Pazzini, the artist, is making of Jack's son, Albert. The latter has also been bitten by the same bug as his father, and is madly in love with Dot. After Albert was supposed to be back in college, when his vacation was over, he was still visiting Dot, at the studio. On one of these occasions our Mr. Jack also entered, and he in turn, has to hide when his wife comes in to look at their son's picture, cuts out the face, and sticks his own face through the opening.

Mother isn't satisfied with the color of her son's nose, so Pazzini obliges by adding a little red, and is rewarded by having a strong set of molars close on his index finger. Jack is discovered by Albert, squares matters by announcing his engagement to Dottie. The gay old lothario in kissing his prospective daughter-in-law, deposits a streak of red on her cheek from his nose, and almost starts another fight, but things are finally smoothed over, and Jack is ready for a new adventure.

ARTIE, THE MILLIONAIRE KID (Vitagraph—Five parts—April 17.).—The cast: Artie (Ernest Truex); Annabelle (Dorothy Kelly); Artie's Dad (John T. Kelly); Uriah Updike (Albert Roccardi); The Detective (William Dunn); The Widow (Etianne Girardot). Written by William Courtney. Produced by Harry Hardworth.

Artie Hamilton is kicked out of college. He starts for New York to break the news to father, Colonel Philetue Hamilton, millionaire railroad magnate. Arriving at the office he helps himself to the stenographer's bon bons, gives his college yell and is then ushered into the office of the president by an office boy who thinks him a "nut," but respects his claim of being the "boss's" son. When his loving parent asks him if he has attained a degree, he replies that they gave him the "G. B., P. D. Q." Whereupon the elder Hamilton ceases to be "loving" and confers the degree of "N. G." on Artie as he throws him through the door. After gaining his balance he shouts back that within a year he will return with enough money to buy the whole road.

Artie is next seen on the outskirts of Byways with a number of books on "How to be Beautiful." During his wanderings he comes across a young woman's seminary and decides this ought to be a good place to dispose of some of his wares. Deciding to investigate, he climbs the wall surrounding the place, discovers a charming young girl, whom he proclaims a "peach" and decides to marry her. He jumps down from the wall and goes to the young lady to make known his intentions. She is greatly alarmed at his disregard of a rule made by the old maid principal, prohibiting men on the school grounds. He is only a short time with Annabelle when the rest of the girls learn of his presence and "How to Be Beautiful" becomes very popular. The principal then discovers the cause of all the excitement when she sees Artie from a distance and makes a mad rush toward him to demand an explanation. When she learns the title of the book she is won over to the cause and nothing is too good for little Artie.

Byways seems to have some attraction for the elder Hamilton, for Artie sees his car on the main street, and unnoticed, steals up behind the machine to find out what it is. From the conversation he learns that Dad is trying to gobble up a right-of-way for a branch of his road from a man named Updike. Now it happens that this same Updike is the wealthiest man in Byways and has set his heart on Annabelle, promising her parents half his fortune if they will consent to the marriage. Artie decides to "get" Updike and still win Annabelle. He buys up a country paper from an editor who is "down and out" and inserts a notice in his paper that a prominent society leader, a widow, was leaving for Byways, where she is interested in an immense business enterprise. He then gets in touch with his old college chum and arranges with him to play the part of the widow.

Updike, ever on the alert, goes to Artie to find out about the business deal. Artie tells him of the railroad and informs him that this is the reason of the widow's coming. When the "widow" arrives Updike is one of the first to greet her and immediately falls victim to her charms. She tells him that his is not the property wanted and advises him to put his land in the hands of Artie, who is now the leading real estate dealer of Byways, to dispose of. This he consents to and Artie forms a syndicate of some of the townspeople and buys the ground. Not satisfied with this, Artie decides to "sting" Updike a little more. He has him buy in some property at an enormous price, of which he and the "widow" are the owners and makes him think this is the ground wanted by the railroad magnate. Updike then informs the people who had entered into Artie's scheme that they have been "bunked," and the office of "The Byways Bee" is stormed with excited people who demand their money back. Artie gladly returns their cash with the exception of Annabelle's pa, and he refuses to give him back his. With the amount secured from the deal with Updike, he purchases the property himself.

Philetue Hamilton again comes into the story when he arrives at Byways with the idea of getting the right-of-way, his surprise cannot be imagined when he finds out that it is his own little boy who owns the desired stretch. He tries to "put one over" on Artie when he gives him a tip on a certain stock in order to get him to draw out of the property deal to invest. Artie plays the tip the other way and "cleans up." He places his price on the land at one million dollars. It comes high, but father must have it—so he signs the check. He has brought joy to the heart of his future father-in-law who sanctions his marriage to his daughter, and Artie places that young lady's fears at rest when he discloses the identity of the "widow."

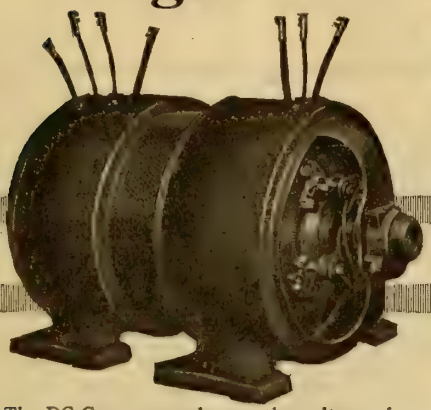
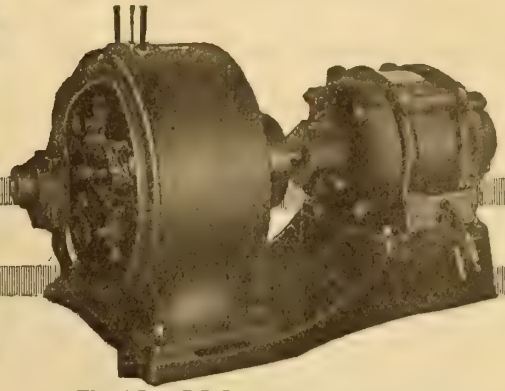
Better Light



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts 2-3 from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

Less Current



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have—alternating or direct—or what voltage or frequency will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear white pictures everybody now demands.

Special screens, projecting machines and first run films won't give results with poor light. The compensarcs will enable you to get the kind of light you want. Steady Light, White Light, Bright Light, regardless of the kind or quality of current you supply.

Compensarcs are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

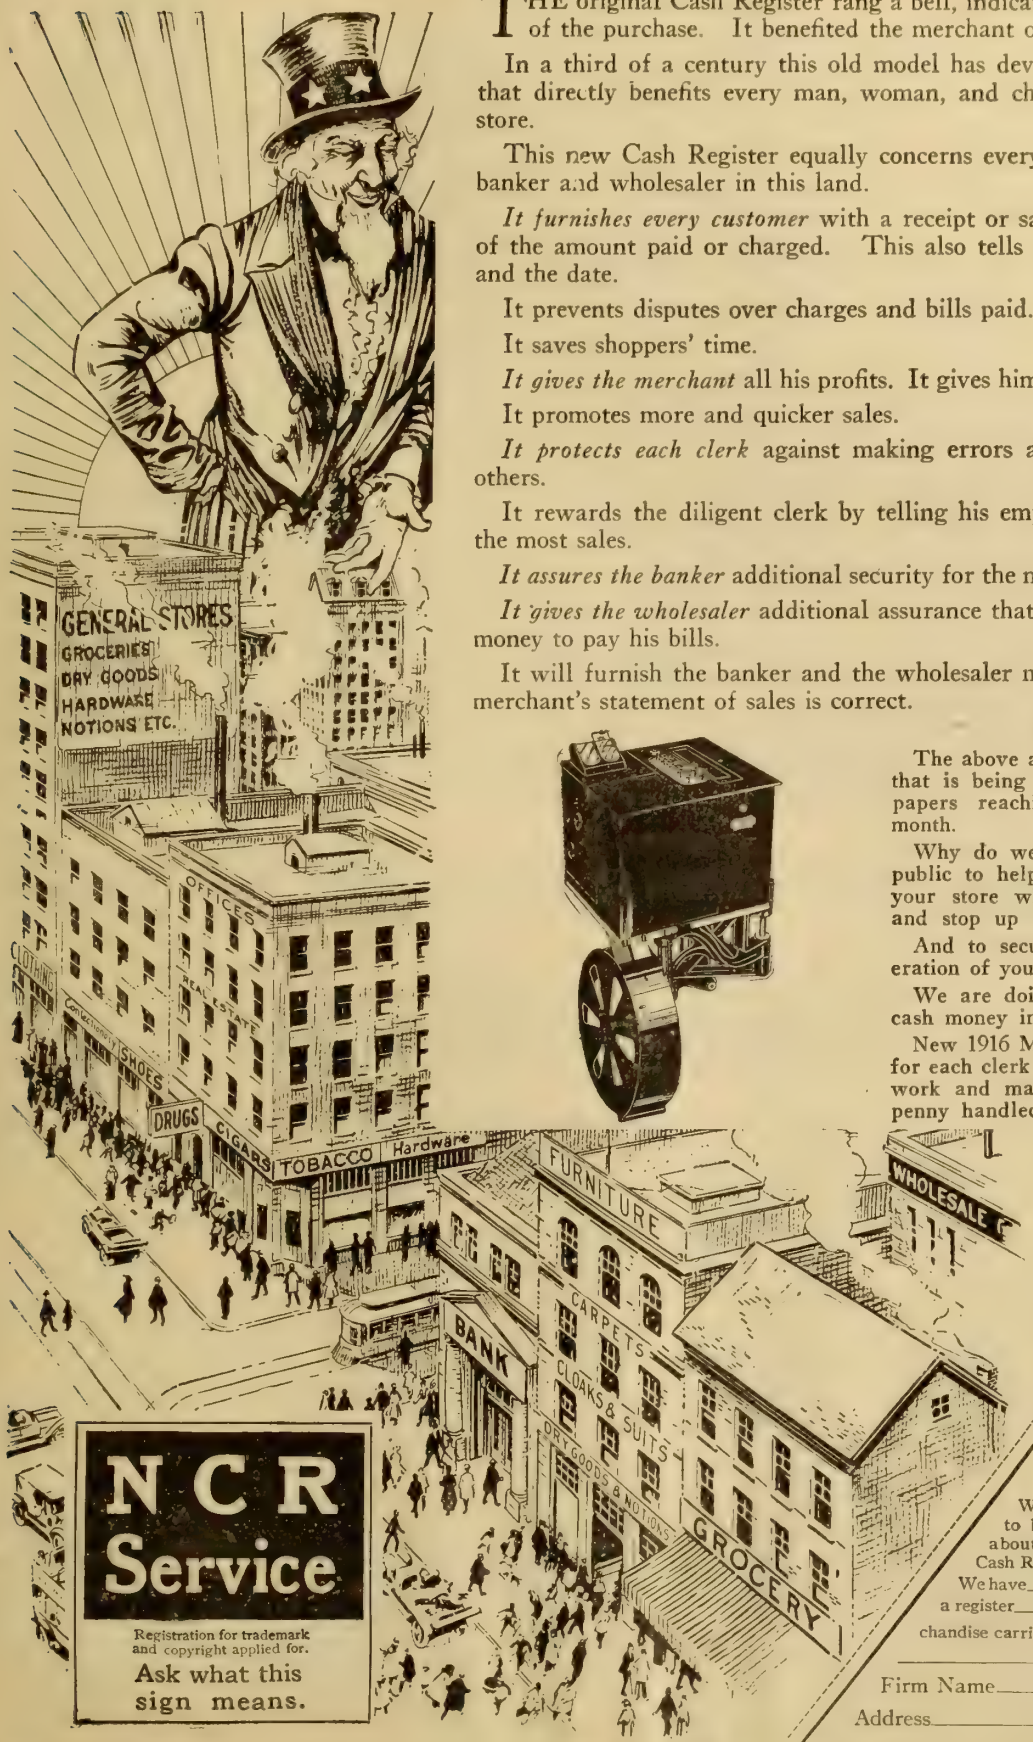
A great National public utility

That concerns all merchants and all people.



THE original Cash Register rang a bell, indicated and recorded the amount of the purchase. It benefited the merchant only.

In a third of a century this old model has developed into a Cash Register that directly benefits every man, woman, and child who spends money in a store.

This new Cash Register equally concerns every merchant and clerk, every banker and wholesaler in this land.

It furnishes every customer with a receipt or sales-slip with printed figures of the amount paid or charged. This also tells in print who made the sale, and the date.

It prevents disputes over charges and bills paid.

It saves shoppers' time.

It gives the merchant all his profits. It gives him more money for his family.

It promotes more and quicker sales.

It protects each clerk against making errors and against the mistakes of others.

It rewards the diligent clerk by telling his employer which one is making the most sales.

It assures the banker additional security for the money he loans the merchant.

It gives the wholesaler additional assurance that the merchant will have the money to pay his bills.

It will furnish the banker and the wholesaler mechanical evidence that the merchant's statement of sales is correct.

Merchants!

The above advertisement is one of a series that is being run in magazines and newspapers reaching sixty million readers a month.

Why do we do it? Simply to teach the public to help you to enforce a system in your store which will both increase sales and stop up leaks and losses.

And to secure for you the hearty co-operation of your banker and your wholesaler.

We are doing this to help you put more cash money in the bank every day.

New 1916 Models have a separate drawer for each clerk; give each credit for his day's work and make him responsible for every penny handled; give you detailed information on cash and charge sales, money received on account, and every other angle of every day's business, in detail and by totals.

Let us explain how we do all of these things for you—and many more.

TYPHOON COOLING & VENTILATING SYSTEM

WILL BE EXHIBITED AT THE

NATIONAL MOTION PICTURE TRADE SHOW

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, New York, May 6th to 14th, 1916

LAST SUMMER THE TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM WAS INSTALLED IN ONE THEATRE IN CHATTANOOGA, ONE IN CHARLESTON AND SAVANNAH.

THIS YEAR TYPHOONS ARE BEING INSTALLED IN EVERY THEATRE IN EACH OF THESE CITIES.

THERE COULD BE NO MORE IMPRESSIVE PROOF OF SUPERIORITY THAN THIS ASTOUNDING RECORD.

IT WILL SURPRISE YOU TO LEARN THAT THE TYPHOONS COST NO MORE THAN THE ORDINARY BUZZ OR EXHAUST FANS, WHICH THEY ARE REPLACING.

YEARS OF STUDY AND EXPERIENCE AND THE FOREMOST ENGINEERING SKILL OF THE DAY IS BACK OF THEIR POPULARITY AND REPUTATION.

YOU NEED NOT FEEL OBLIGATED BECAUSE OF ASKING OUR ENGINEERING DEPARTMENT FOR INFORMATION.

Experience!!

Is easily the biggest word in the English language. It is the answer to success or failure—efficiency or incompetence!

EXPERIENCE

according to Webster, is to "know or prove by trial," and that's exactly what we have been doing in the handling of projection apparatus FOR MORE THAN TWENTY YEARS!

EXPERIENCE

has neither LENGTH, BREADTH nor DEPTH yet it can be seen—and seen quickly, too, in your purchases of projection apparatus!

Don't regard projection equipment as a mere collection of gears, cast iron, glass and sheet metal. Insist upon service—reliability—dependability—three essentials to be found only in the stable, substantial character of the house that executes your order.

Representative exhibitors of the better class everywhere confine their purchases to us—and the older, wiser and more experienced they are the more certain are we to please them.

How many vacant seats were there in YOUR theatre last summer?

"GLOBE" VENTILATORS

Close, stuffy air keeps people away from the movies—"GLOBE" Ventilators bring them back.

Cost little to install—nothing to operate—absolutely silent—no moving parts—weather-proof—work ALL the time.

Install a "GLOBE" Ventilator and fill those empty seats. Full information on request to Dept. M.

All Eyes on a Line

A NEW CHAIR

That Enables Everybody to See and Be Comfortable

Can be changed from an adult's chair to a child's chair by pressing the catch and raising as illustrated. Returns to adult's position and locks just as easily.

It provides a child with a seat proportioned to his body, a foot rest the right height and puts the child's eyes on a line with those of adults, enabling him to see without annoyance to others or discomfort to himself. The offers theatre owners something for which there is a real need. Fortunately it is not an extra expense but an added source of profit because it—

FOCO

Adjustable Chair

Does away with the free kids.

Increases the patronage of children; also the adults who come with children.

Attracts patronage of adults who won't now attend because of discomfort of holding children on their laps.

Attracts patronage from theatres not equipped with Foco chairs.

FOCO Chairs cost now only a few cents more than ordinary chairs. Made in all sizes and finishes. Old chairs can be converted into Foco Chairs at cost considerably less than the cost of new chairs. Leading chair companies are licensed to make Foco Chairs and can supply you.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

1st April 1916.

My dear Mr. Richardson:

After having carefully perused the third edition of your Hand Book, it gives me great pleasure to express my admiration for the wonderful manner in which you have handled this difficult work, and I feel that you are to be highly commended for the energy and intelligence displayed in compiling the really valuable information.

The new Hand Book surpasses the previous editions and it should certainly be in the hands of all operators and others using motion picture projection machines.

Wishing you continued success and with very kindest regards and best wishes, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

The dawn of a more profitable business comes with the installation of an American Standard Motion Picture Machine, because perfection in projection accompanies the American Standard. The machine is and will last for years and years. There are no big repair bills. The chances of breakdowns are reduced to the minimum. The American Standard will work for you, as the machines have worked for others, for five and six and even eight years, and still give good service.

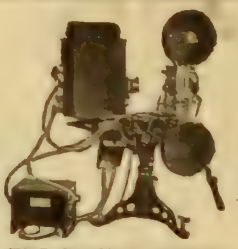
The American Standard Motion Picture Machine is a marvel of simplicity in design and construction. It is made of fewer parts, which are stronger and better in every way and so make the machine



THE MASTER MODEL

DEPENDABLE

You may rely upon the American Standard at all times and under the most trying times and conditions. Operators by the score say it is the easiest to run and to handle. The public selects the house that uses Standard Projection in preference to all others, for they find the throw of the American Standard easy on the eyes and they are not annoyed by flicker and other poor projection troubles.

All of us must help to make the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund successful. Only a few weeks remain. We must all do our share. $500,000 by May 16th. That should be easy. There are four hundred thousand of us in the film industry—and we can do it—we can make it—if each man and woman will do his or her share.

CONTRIBUTE!

Contribute some money today. Send it to the treasurer, J. Stuart Blackton, Locust Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. The actor helps everyone—every community in distress—but who helps the retired actor?

DO YOUR SHARE NOW!

We must give half of the $1,000,000 endowment for the Actors' Fund and the Actors' Home—the public will help—and put the Fund and the Home on a safe basis forever. It is our duty—let us do our share now.

"A HUNTRESS OF MEN"

STORY BY G. VERE TYLER
DIRECTED BY LUCIUS HENDERSON

The story of a woman who thought Love was a Game, and who hunted men's hearts for sport. Of a strong man who taught her that Love was a great privilege, to be won only through Sacrifice. A picture remarkable for the love theme, the human interest, the lavish production, strong acting and unusual climax.

THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

COMMON sense is common sense, whether it be in the show business or in anything else. If the Exhibitors complaining about hard times would stop to analyze causes and not follow like sheep, they would find the moving picture is still, and always will be the amusement of the masses. The masses are still here and want to be amused. Sensible, conservative producers are still here and are ready to supply them with the short, diversified program that the masses want for their amusement. If the Exhibitor will only think and act for himself and be original instead of always watching what the other fellow is doing, he will soon find that the United States mint isn't in it when it comes to making money out of a theatre which is operated with a stamp of individuality. Remember: MOVING PICTURES ARE HERE TO STAY. THE FEATURE PROGRAM HAS PROVEN UNPROFITABLE TO THE EXHIBITOR. THE EXHIBITOR WILL NOT STAY IN BUSINESS IF SUCH BUSINESS IS UNPROFITABLE. EXHIBITING WAS PROFITABLE BEFORE THE FEATURE CRAZE STARTED. The only logical conclusion is—THE DIVERSIFIED PROGRAM MUST COME BACK.

The most prosperous Exhibitors in the world today are the fortunate ones who are showing the REGULAR UNIVERSAL PROGRAM—the Greatest Program On Earth.

Mary Fuller in "A Huntress of Men." With Joseph Gerard and Sydney Bracey. A caveman drama of absorbing interest. Fifteenth Red Feather Production. Story by G. Vere Tyler. Directed by Lucius Henderson. Released May 8. Mary thought love was a game, and ensnaring men's hearts the greatest sport in the world. She brought Sydney to her feet a broken-hearted, disillusioned boy, prevented from suicide only by the timely arrival of a friend. The action hinges on Mary's introduction to a big, dominant man, vigorously portrayed by Joseph Gerard, who tells her he is going to marry her, tame her and make her love him. Innumerable strong situations tell how this seeming mismating brought a great and tender love to them both. A great entertainment for all, with especial interest for the ladies in seeing Mary wear forty 'leven different gowns, each a little "chic-cer" than the others, and Gosh! how she can wear clothes! If you, Mr. Exhibitor, want to please everybody that comes to your theatre, you will book and show this great Red Feather Production, and thank the old reliable Universal for the privilege.

Herbert Rawlinson in "The Mark of a Gentleman." With Agnes Vernon. Two Reel Gold Seal Society Drama. Directed by Wm. Worthington. Released May 9. You'll be surprised even to think of anyone mistaking Herbert for anything but a gentleman, but you see, he took a job as athletic instructor—teaching a lot of tired business men how to reduce, and improve their wind, so, of course, Agnes's papa couldn't see him socially—at first. Herbert sprung a little surprise, though, that puts a corking climax into this bully picture which will tickle your audiences all over in spots.

"Gertie's Gasolene Glide." With Gertrude Selby, Billy Armstrong and Phil Dunham. Two Reel L-KO Automobile Comedy. Released May 10. Billy and Gertie go for a motorcycle ride. She is tickled to death until Phil comes along with a cycle car built for two. But when that bucks and throws her down a manhole Gertie gets peeved. By this time Billy has acquired a flivver. She is on the upward scale all right, and goes for another ride. But she has the manhole habit this time, and finally marries the guy with a cycle car. Billy then takes bride and groom for a honeymoon ride, and for one solid roaring, screaming reel he makes the flivver do stunts and flip-flops, being merrily chased by a police auto patrol and a cycle cop in the meantime. For sheer fun and for clever, original and daring auto stunts this comedy is posi-tive-ly in a class by itself. It has more punch than any slap-stick laugh-maker you ever saw. Don't overlook this one if you want to give the comedy-loving fans a genuine treat.

"Her Husband's Faith." Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnston. A Two Reel Laemmle Emotional Drama of unusual strength. Directed by Lloyd Carleton. Released May 11. Dorothy says to her husband, "Five blissful years of marriage, a beautiful home, a tender husband and a darling baby—surely God has been good to me." Within two hours her home, her husband, her baby and their happiness were threatened by a shadow from the past. Her husband's faith pointed the way out, and the dark hour served only to bring them closer together. A regular-regular Universal Program picture. That's a lot.

"The Capital Prize." With Harry Benham and Tina Marshall. A thrilling Two Reel Imp Secret Service Drama. Story by Edwin Stevens and Norbert Lusk. Directed by Edwin Stevens. Released May 12. One of America's finest actors, Edwin Stevens made his first screen appearance in "The Man Inside," a wonderful Universal five reel feature. Unlike many stage stars, he has made a study of the requirements of the screen and the Universal now presents the first picture he has ever directed. It is a wonderfully good picture, with two particularly fine actors in the lead. Further evidence of the constant progressive policy that makes the Universal the mightest and most popular program on earth.

"A Fight for Love." With G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson. Two Reel 101-Bison Black Hand Drama. Directed by Jacques Jaccard. Released May 13. A sensational thriller that will keep your audience gasping. The inner methods of the Black Hand. The secret devices of the dread Camorra. The third degree applied to a man whom the Camorra has "framed." A most unexpected climax and a thread of love interest combine to put punch after punch into a most vigorous presentation. Enough action crammed into two reels to make five of the ordinary producer's "features."

"A Soul for Sale." An intensely emotional and daring Three Reel Rex Drama. Directed by Henry Bently. Released May 14. Bartering her innocence for gold; sanctifying the sacrifice with a marriage rite; with the approval of a father who otherwise faced ruin, a lovely girl in this intense photoplay pays the terrible price which is always exacted from those who attempt to stifle a true love. A remarkable feature that will pack your house.

All These Features Are Released on the Regular Universal Program.

State Rights Now Selling---A Rare

Crowds pushed, shoved, jammed and crammed their way into Chicago houses, until these fortunate theatres night after night were displaying the S. R. O. sign continuously.

No artiste in the world ever received so great an ovation in a screen entertainment. It is a great achievement, evidencing her personal popularity.

The Public came and paid their good money. The Press devoted columns to the warmest expressions of approval and praise. In New York at the Globe Theatre on Broadway, came a repetition of the Chicago crowds.

Read these words of praise from the big metropolitan dailies of Chicago and New York:

No cinema production of the year has called forth more expressions of approval than Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici."—Chicago American.

A Swiftly Moving Story— A Great Company!

"The Secret of the Submarine" strikes the keynote of real Americanism—makes it heard around the world! The invention, barely achieved, is destroyed in a fierce undersea encounter. The United States and foreign governments—also a selfish millionaire—are in a hot contest for it. With the inventor's death, the sole records, hidden in an old library pass from hand to hand. The mad chase carries to Paris, London, Petrograd and back to U. S. soil. The inventor's daughter's "identity" is the "mystery within a mystery" that millions will strive to solve.

Juanita Hansen

The well balanced company is ideal as it draws with vivid contrasts, keen delineations the different strong characters. Thomas Chatterton, the popular leading man, is a striking figure, an intrepid actor who scores continuously. Opposite him, captivating, beautiful Juanita Hansen is the heroine ideal—with the daring and dash that thrills! The inventor, millionaire, his nephew and foreign representatives are all powerful parts powerfully played by Hugh Bennett, Lamar Johnstone, Joseph Beaudry, George Clancy, Hylda Hollis, Harry Edmondson, William Tedmarsh, George Webb—names well known to exhibitors and public—who will be remembered in years to come for their stellar work in "The Secret of the Submarine."

In Our Town!

Rev. Abednego chose as the text for his trial sermon, "Israel, or Forty Years in the Wilderness." He never received a call!

Israel McGish, our Church Deacon, considered the text a personal affront, also an unnecessary attack on our Commonwealth.

The text went home, however, for we were partial to roller towels, tin dippers, gourds, and wooden awnings.

But all has changed since "The Spare Moments" theatre instituted a program of shorter-length fillums. Spending money is not overly plentiful In Our Town, and we haven't the price for a steady diet of feature fillums, no matter how good.

Now the Eighth Grade, Central School, attends showings of The Selig-Tribune in a body; the Art Embroidery Club members have quit reading "The Duchess" and adopted recent resolutions praising Selig's "The Man Within" and "An Elephant's Gratitude," released through General Film Service.

NOW LISTEN! Mr. George Campbell, of the Majestic theatre, Spencer, Ind., a small-town Exhibitor, writes: "We use all Seligs we can secure from the General Film Co. We intend to push one reel wild animal productions. We wish to emphasize that we are strong for Selig films. Wild animal dramas go fine. Our public desires good short length productions. Please accept our congratulations on your stand for short subjects."

Here's What You Are Looking For!

Every exhibitor has felt the dearth of short, snappy subjects with stars of the first magnitude featured.

This is what Essanay now is offering you—two and three act photoplays with select plots and its BEST actors in the leads.

It believes in short subjects; it uses just as much care in selecting and producing them as it does multiple reel features.

And it is making them better all the time.

WM A BRADY

DIRECTOR-GENERAL

NEW YORK CITY

April 15, 1916.

Second Letter.
TO EXHIBITORS:

I know that most every exhibitor is "from Missouri."

Last week I announced that henceforth my name would appear on no picture which I did not supervise personally. Now I am beseiged by hundreds of exhibitors who wish to see for themselves some of our new-day pictures.

Therefore, in order that every exhibitor may be his own judge, we now announce a national exhibition day for our new World-Pictures, Brady-Made - April 24.

You may see our new pictures at our expense.

We are certain that a demonstration of this sort will bring general applause - simply because no company has ever dared to show such unlimited confidence in its productions.

On April 24 you can say "Show Me", in everyone of our 24 Exchanges. You may see for yourself three of the new picture plays which bear my name. These screen dramas are:

"The Closed Road" with House Peters.
"The Feast of Life" with Clara Kimball Young.
"Her Maternal Right" with Kitty Gordon.

I am proud of these pictures. Please note the wonderful detail in the acting and the staging, which shows the craftsmanship of my associates, Maurice Tourneur, A. Cappallini and Robt. Thornby. But - judge for yourself. I know you will not underestimate the artistry of these three master directors.

Read our offer of a free trip on the next page. Remember that a few days after the private exhibition, there appears the double page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post Your patrons will want to see World Pictures.

If I were an exhibitor, I'd not be slow to take up a proposition like this - especially when we go as far as to pay expenses.

Yours truly

William A. Brady

Director-General.

Hundreds of Exhibitors Now Want World Pictures

New day policies quickly win nation-wide applause from progressive showmen

Now hundreds of exhibitors everywhere are clamoring for Brady-made pictures.

We find ourselves in the midst of a sensation.

Our announcements in the trade papers last week and our mail communications direct to exhibitors have heralded a new day.

Wm. A. Brady now personally directs all World Pictures. Two concerns—World and Equitable—have combined, thus uniting all their artistic and financial resources.

To remedy the evils of overproduction and do away with a forced schedule of 104 productions a year, our schedule has been halved temporarily—so as to improve the product. There is time now for sincere workmanship.

Now great film favorites, leading directors and unlimited studio resources are all at the command of a master mind.

On May 6 appears the first two-page advertisement of World Pictures in the Saturday Evening Post, which will be read by millions of people—your patrons.

And you've just read of the "Show Me Day" for exhibitors.

All these definite things have given progressive exhibitors new confidence and new respect for World Pictures.

All these performances, instead of promises, impress exhibitors with the new earning power of the World Pictures.

During the past week, have YOU been visited by a World salesman—or have you been waiting? Please do not wait. This nation-wide interest has swamped our sales force.

So wire Mr. Brady or Mr. Shubert, or your nearest World Exchange. Do not run a risk.

National "Show Me" Day for Exhibitors On April 24 in 24 Cities

You may see the next three Brady-made releases at the expense of the World Film Corporation

Here is another performance—not a promise.

Here is a man-to-man way of proving that the new Brady-made pictures warrant your obtaining them for your theatre.

We are so utterly confident of the merit of our Brady-made pictures that we will stake our future with you on your judgment of our new releases.

Now you can see what you are going to get—weeks before. You have an opportunity to judge the new standard of World Pictures.

We will pay your expenses to the nearest exchange for the private exhibition on April 24.

This is absolute, wherever you are, with only one reservation, as follows: This offer is only to exhibitors not now booking World Pictures on a contract, and who, after seeing the pictures and being satisfied with them, sign a contract for World Pictures for one year.

This offer you will admit, is perfectly fair,—for we cannot pay the traveling expenses of 20,000 exhibitors—some limit must be set.

We are adopting this well known merchandizing idea, never before applied in this business. You recognize its soundness, of course. It means sampling before you buy.

We want to say nothing that sounds like a promise about our new Brady-made pictures. We want you to judge for yourself, calmly and without undue influence. But we are satisfied that if you merely see them, their merit will be apparent.

Arrange now with our nearest exchange for your free trip. Let nothing keep you away.

Thousands of progressive exhibitors on April 24 are going to be surprised and will then make a business move which will mean much profit to them. Do not leave yourself out and be sorry later.

THIS IS THE WAY THE ESSANAY-CHAPLIN

BROADWAY AT 41ST STREET

NEW YORK CITY. April 12, 16,

V-L-S-E, Inc.,
1600 Broadway,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I booked Charlie Chaplin in his screaming, roaring four part comedy, his burlesque on "Carmen" for one week at the Broadway Theatre, exclusive rights.

Instead of running this attraction at the Broadway, I should have rented Madison Square Garden, and then I do not think I would have been able to accommodate the throngs of people that gathered in and about the Broadway. By this I mean to say, the throngs that were turned away, not even able to purchase tickets or in any way gain admittance to the theatre.

The double force of employes at the Broadway were unable to handle the vast crowds, and when the New York City police were called, they were also helpless for some hours. The heavy copper doors in the lobby were simply torn off of their hinges by the rushing, pushing crowds. The line reached around the block to Seventh Avenue and down to the Metropolitan Opera House. More people reviewed this film than any attraction we have ever had in the house. On the opening day over nine thousand people paid admission, which more than paid for the rental of the film for the entire week. There have been other film successes along Broadway, but this we are confident smashes all previous records.

Trusting that the rest of your exhibitors will have the greatest and glorious success that I have had, I remain,

Yours very truly,

Leon D Langsfeld

Facts and Comments

HAS Arthur Brisbane made the motion picture famous? He has now delivered himself of two opinions on the subject of the screen. The first was distinctly unfavorable, but there has been a recantation, which of course is liable to alterations without notice. Wonderful is the vitality of the motion picture; it lives and prospers whether the learned editor approves or disapproves. It's a good guess that the motion picture will be indorsed by Professor Brisbane as a good advertising medium.

A PROMINENT exhibitor is heard to make this statement: "During a recent hearing at Washington on Federal control of motion pictures the industry was represented on the firing line solely by producers and their allies." This statement is followed by the indignant question: "Why were not the exhibitors to give voice to the demands of their patrons?" The exhibitors, we hasten to answer, were present. There were at least a dozen of them. The President of the National Exhibitors' League of America made a very fine speech against Federal Censorship and other exhibitors, too, were heard on the same side. If our friend will write to J. L. Fort, the Clerk of the House Committee on Education at Washington, D. C., he will be supplied with a record of the hearings. We advise him to get a copy. The information contained in the documents will help him to form a correct opinion on Federal Censorship.

FIFTEEN per cent. represents the total amount of American-made films now used in the Latin-American markets. A well-known dealer and exchange man from Buenos Aires, who is thoroughly familiar with the conditions in South America, being a native and life-long resident of Argentine, after spending some time in New York city, declares that even a little enterprise on the part of the American producer will increase that fifteen per cent. to fifty per cent. "The best pictures your country has produced," he said to a representative of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, "are unknown in our country. It seems you only send your worst stuff to us." A line to the editor of Cine-Mundial will bring interesting information to any one who is interested in the Latin-American market. "Cine-Mundial" is the Spanish edition of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

EVERY man and woman, whether within or without the ranks of the film industry, who helps to make children's entertainments successful is entitled to the gratitude of the opponents of censorship. "The child's welfare" is the only solid argument which the advocates of censorship are able to bring forward. It's the only argument which secures them a hearing before the legislative bodies. The Child Problem is a real problem. It behooves us all to study it and try to solve it. One thing, however, is certain: The Child Problem will never be solved by censorship. Constructive, intelligent and public-spirited work is needed to solve the problem. Parental control is another solution.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has received many commendatory letters on its recent article, "Your House Is Your Best Friend." Amidst the present confusion and overproduction this motto is a good one to tie to. We know that the idea of advertising the house rather than a particular brand of film is spreading among exhibitors. This is but a natural evolution. In Great Britain it has always been the house rather than the brand of film. "Stars," too, may be over-advertised.

HERE is a new angle to the censorship question brought out by a daily paper in a big Western city. The paper calls attention to the fact that the morals of the censors are seriously imperiled by their seeing so many naughty pictures. Sound logic it seems to us. Censors are but men tainted like the rest of us with all the dire consequences of original sin. If bad pictures are harmful to the man in the street they may hurt the virtue of the censor. Some time ago the Pennsylvania head censor arranged to give an exhibition of "cut-outs" to the legislators of the lower house at Harrisburg, and only the refusal of the film men to lend their machine to any such purpose prevented the wicked performance. Uncensored film cannot be shown to anybody in Pennsylvania outside of the censors and their henchmen.

Overproduction

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

TO "give the people what they like" assumes a power that few men possess, that of forming the truest and fittest judgment of what it is that "the people like." Nearly every man now engaged in motion-picture production feels that he, at least, no matter about the others, is especially qualified to determine in advance what will succeed, and the tremendous popularity of the new art is apt to sustain him in the opinion. Because nearly all people love moving pictures and flock to the exhibitions by millions he is almost sure to reach a period where he imagines that all he has to do is to turn out as many releases as possible, and the little dimes will do the rest.

There need be no alarm over this situation for the producer who is intent on giving the people something worth while for their money, who is not neglecting enlightened patronage in the general popular support. He need not even concern himself about those debasing and destructive forces who expect to apply dishonest business practices to production and distribution. Any monied man, or group of financiers, can open an office and give out announcements of startling innovations to appear, but it is one thing to publish good intentions and quite another to meet the exactions of even the present standards, to say nothing of the standards far beyond those of the present, toward which we are advancing through critical discrimination and competitive artistry. It is becoming more difficult every day for money and fine business organization to succeed with what was deemed "good enough" last year.

The product of merit may not make a hit from the outset, especially with buyers of uncultivated taste, but it will always win out in the end, endure beyond the ordinary life of a release, if supported intelligently and long enough to give it a hold on the public. It is the picture that succeeds in the "long run" that earns the largest dividends.

The desire to make quick money and get all there is while the getting is good must be held responsible for overproduction and, at the same time, for the hurry calls imposed on directors and a consequent ineffectiveness of story visualization. It may also be held responsible for a weary sameness of repertory. A few well-known stories are repeated over and over again, and the unvarying formula is produce something which has already done service as a stage play, or a novel, whether or not the original product was of any great account.

It is entirely reasonable to trim and keep burning the few old lamps which have brightened other generations than our own. The highest examples of literature and the drama may well be preserved in picture form, but never to the exclusion of those which portray the facts of contemporary life. The mark of the artist is that he is alert to the meaning of present-day events and capable of presenting them in artistic form. Popular favor is a changing not a fixed condition. Overproduction may well be a mere sameness of production with little variety, scarcely an example of what is engaging present attention, to say nothing of stories that peer into the future, as did the fascinating prophecies of Jules Verne nearly two generations ago, as have some of the most popular contributions to printed and uttered fiction. We have been lectured enough on the truth that used to be. We would like to get some response to what we feel is true of today.

A great deal that is hurtful to the best and broadest interests of motion-picture production has sprung from the haste and greed of commercialism and from a lack of real courage about venturing into new fields. Are we to expect better pictures from business organization and reorganization any more than we need except educationals from a man who would not know how to train his own children if he had any? Through the activities of author and director, through the discriminating taste of capable critics, and only through them can improvement be evolved.

Here we are, millions of common people, individuals in a way, yet interdependent and one great mass so far as primitive impulse is concerned. Each one is trying to work out a tiny career of his own. All are conscious of difficulties in the way, and these difficulties often become vital problems for the race. One of those problems of almost universal interest relates directly to self-improvement. Hence the progress of society, not the history of its past conditions, is of leading importance. There is one answer to the secret of "what the people want." There is more meaning and mystery in what is immediate than there is in all that has ever been.

Of what avail is business organization and reorganization, combination and recombination, if it is but dimly understood what all this is for? A progress in artistry is involved. There is a call for what is new in story delight and picture charm. The public craves variety and improvement. Are there not problems of creative genius and artistry involved? Is not the quickest solution of the whole problem the simplest as well, that of employing capital in recognition of artistry and business organization in marketing the product?

Will some kind soul please point out an overproduction of superior quality. Is overproduction not confined to the studio-made stuff that has "cheap" written all over it and those repetitions which are beginning to get on our nerves? Who is producing too many fine pictures? Who is turning out a series of strong plays of theme close to the hearts and minds of our people? Go to him and ask him if he is at all worried about overproduction. It will be found that his greatest distress is that of keeping up a supply to fit the demand.

It is true that fine business organization is needed to bring about popular realization of superiority—that is a very important part of the game—but high quality has got to be there in order that fine business organization may have any noticeable reason for existence. The new art was not created as it now exists, and future production is bound to be a matter of survival. Those producers who respond most readily to the popular demand, who adapt themselves easily to changing tastes and circumstances, have a big advantage over the ones who cling to old ideas, and they will be preserved as the fittest.

The conflict in Europe shows us that one nation can not express itself in the terms of another nation. Just so one generation can not express itself in the terms of another generation. Our people as individuals are chiefly concerned about what is going on today. When broadened by social organization, they are chiefly concerned about what is to happen in the near future. Plays should concern our own ideals, not those of our ancestors. Of stories written to suit the needs and pleasure of this generation there is underproduction.

New Lights on Posters

By W. Stephen Bush.

IS THE poster a friend of the exhibitor? Most exhibitors seem to think so, though there have been many conversions to a different belief. Of course a good deal depends on the neighborhood, but that element isn't always as important and as controlling as some would have us believe. I am not speaking of the lurid poster at all. That the lurid poster is an unmixed evil goes without saying and needs no demonstration.

At a recent gathering of exhibitors the subject of posters was gone into very thoroughly. One prominent exchange man with lots of experience spoke on the question. There was, of course, a diversity of opinions, but one fact stood out distinctly. Exhibitors are more open-minded on the subject of posters, they no longer overestimate the function of "paper." Time was when exhibitors used to say: "Let me look at your paper. If that is all right, if the 'flash' is good I don't care much about your picture. On the other hand, no matter how good your picture is I have no use for it without strong paper."

We have passed this stage. Intelligent observation and experiment have had a good deal to do with the change. One exhibitor who had believed implicitly in the miraculous power of paper was converted by an exchange man through two or three practical tests. The two men stood in the lobby of a theatre which showed "first runs." Two women came in, looked at the one sheet and three sheets of a picture never publicly shown before and said: "Why, we have seen this picture." Whereupon they both walked out. There was a steady flow of people all that afternoon, and half a dozen who stopped to look at the paper were heard to declare they had seen the picture before. The situation got on the exhibitor's nerves and he explained to one of the patrons who claimed to have seen the picture before that they must be mistaken, as the films had only been released that very day. The patron in question and willing to bet that he had seen the picture before and walked away with a poor opinion of our exhibitor's veracity.

What is the answer? Similarity of subjects, similarity of titles result in similarity of paper. The experienced exchange man advised the exhibitor on his next visit to the exchange to get the manager to put paper on five subjects in a row on the floor and see how closely the ones and the threes resembled each other. This exhibitor followed the advice, and now he has a very elegant bulletin board, large in size and artistic in execution. On this bulletin board he features the star of the day, and his house and the rest of his program is set forth in smaller type, each subject accompanied by a short synopsis.

Paper will stand scrutiny. It pays to discriminate I am far from blaming the makers of the paper. The plain fact is that they simply aim to supply the demand as it comes to them from the ranks of the exhibitors. Lack of good taste and lack of any artistic effort cannot be justly charged against the man who makes the paper. I believe a light is breaking in upon the exhibitors. They begin to realize that paper does not play the most important part in their exhibition. They have it in their power to demand clean posters and suitable posters. They have it in their power to insist upon attractive posters; posters that will invite business and not frighten it away. More individuality in posters is needed, more variety and more original treatment. Unless the poster men respond promptly to these demands they will fall behind in the swift progress, which is our industry's chiefest characteristic. Posters must show the same improvement that is common to the motion picture theatre.

Organization in the Northwest

By W. Stephen Bush.

TO THE hosts of exhibitors who are about to gather at Minneapolis to hold an important convention and exposition The Moving Picture World extends its best wishes. We hope that their meetings will be successful, we hope that the great art of exhibition will be advanced by the coming together of so many representative men who are giving their best efforts to the upbuilding of the screen and its standards. No section of the country is more typically American, none is more progressive and prosperous than the great Northwest. The exhibitors of the northwest have deserved well of the motion picture. They have always stood for high standards in taste and in ethics, they have looked upon exhibiting as a sacred calling rather than a mere method of making money.

The Minneapolis Convention and Exposition has a special significance. It calls attention to the fact that the spirit of organization among exhibitors is making giant strides. The exhibitor has come to realize both his power and his responsibility. He knows that in every campaign waged for the uplift of the industry, indeed for every movement within the industry and for every fight against the common foe the intelligent co-operation of the exhibitor is indispensable. In no branch of the industry has there been as profound a change as in the exhibiting ranks. The artificial conditions surrounding the early days of the motion picture tended to rob the exhibitor of initiative and deaden his spirit of enterprise. We do not hesitate to say that the most hopeful and encouraging sign on the motion picture horizon is the growing independence of the exhibitor.

For the Whole Industry

By W. Stephen Bush.

SPEAKING from a fairly intimate contact with the exhibitor, I am bound to add that he looks upon The Moving Picture World as his best friend and his most honest adviser. Without the continued confidence of our vast army of readers our field of usefulness will be circumscribed in narrow bounds; with this confidence and with the profound belief in the sincerity of our desire to serve the exhibitor our field of usefulness must grow like the sturdy oak with its roots deep in the soil.

The Moving Picture World gives its advertisers more than circulation. The Moving Picture World as everybody knows has incomparably the largest circulation in the motion picture field, but it gives its advertisers an added and unique value. This value to the advertiser consists in the presumption of honesty and good faith which attach to every line appearing in The Moving Picture World, whether it is in the text or in the advertising pages. When you hear a motion picture man say, "I saw it in The World," it means a whole lot to the advertiser. That's why the constant stream of new subscriptions pouring into The Moving Picture World takes on such deep significance. Every reader is a friend. Every reader knows that we are geared and gauged to serve every branch of the industry, as even the most casual glance at our varied departments will plainly show. To be all things to all motion picture men is our unswerving aim. The Moving Picture World was never built to be a house organ or to be the mouth-piece of any factional interest. We represent the whole industry. Our readers would not have it otherwise.

Interest in Actors' Fund Spreads

Reports from Committees in All Parts of the Country Indicate that $500,000 Will Be Raised.

THE National Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Campaign, which was organized to promote the collection of $500,000 for the Actors' Fund, has completed a chain of committees from coast to coast and announces that everywhere most active interest has been awakened among film people. Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the Executive Committee, finds that the responses to its appeals have far exceeded expectations.

Not only are film actors and actresses sending in generous contributions daily to J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer of the campaign, but also theater proprietors in every section of the country are declaring their intention of doing their part towards raising the $500,000. Monday, May 15, has been fixed as National Motion Picture Tribute Day, on which it is planned that a portion of the receipts of every theater in the land where films are shown will be donated to the fund. Already 1,200 proprietors and managers have promised to contribute 10 per cent. or more of the money which they take in on that date. These pledges are not confined to any one section. Their range is the widest possible, as shown by the preliminary honor roll of theaters announced by the executive committee of the campaign two weeks ago. Since that time scores of additional managers have signified their intention of joining in the great work. A random selection from these new responses shows the extent to which the active interest of busy, practical men has been awakened in a single humanitarian purpose.

Here are a few of the latest additions to the theater list for National Tribute Day:—F. H. Schanze, Shanze theater, Baltimore, Md.; F. M. Bond, Bond theater, Pontiac, Ill.; Ario Bertotti, Columbia theater, Clinton, Ill.; Jay E. Gould, Crystal theater, Glencoe, Minn.; E. Newman, Grand theater, Helena, Ark.; Guy Mahoney, Plam theater, Missouri Valley, Iowa; C. A. Orr, Princess theater, Grace, Idaho; I. W Dakin, Gem theater, Hood River, Ore. The capacity of these houses ranges from 800 down to 200, and they represent cities and hamlets. Never before was a movement of this kind met with such diversified and general support.

A letter received from J. S. Smoot, manager of the Camden theater, Parkersburg, W. Va., was of the kind that gives cheer to the Motion Picture Campaign's Executive Committee. Mr. Smoot notified Mr. Goldfish that on Sunday, April 30, he will give a sacred concert in his theater, the entire proceeds of which will be sent to Treasurer Blackton. Sunday, is of course, one of the best nights in the week with any motion picture manager, and Mr. Smoot's offer shows a spirit which would bring great results if emulated. Monday was selected by the executive committee for National Tribute Day, so as not to place too great a tax upon managers, but many of them have written to headquarters that if their returns on that day do not come up to a satisfactory figure they will contribute from the receipts of some other date.

In every section of the United States branch committees have now been organized and are rolling the big $500,000 ball larger with every day's effort. Busy men of big affairs in every walk of life are donating a part of their energies to the Motion Picture Campaign. John Kunsky, the millionaire theater owner of Detroit, is a typical example. The friendly rivalry among the large cities as to which shall make the best showing on National Tribute Day awakened Mr. Kunsky's interest and his pride to see that his home territory does its share. This hustling motion picture magnate is in direct control of ten big theaters, besides which he has a personal following and social affiliation that have enabled him to enlist the interest and activities of many men of consequence and money-getting value in the middle west. He has formed a committee headed by the Hon. Oscar B. Marx, Mayor of Detroit, as honorary chairman. Mr. Kunsky himself has assumed the hard working office of active chairman.

The latest big community to enter the competition of cities is Washington, D. C. An energetic committee has been organized in the national capital. The chairman of the Boarl of City Commissioners is the honorary chairman, and Alfred Ferguson is the active chairman. Other members of the committee are J. H. Walraven, J. L. Yates, and Fred Haskins.

Omaha, Neb., also has fallen in line. The Screen Club of this progressive western city is busy and on May 11, will give a ball. In addition to the presence of the leading officials and business men of Omaha at the Screen ball, it is promised that all the theatrical stars playing within easy distance of the city, will be present, and some unusual entertainment is confidently expected. Having before them the records of the Screen Clubs of other cities, the Omaha club intends doing equally well. In New Orleans a carefully selected committee, headed by D. L. Nicholson, is working hard to bring the donations of the Gulf City and surrounding districts up to a high figure.

Definite plans have now been formulated in Buffalo for a big boost for the campaign. B. J. Brandon, of the Buffalo Screen Club, has gathered together a committee for western New York which promises big things. It is composed of H. Edel, M. J. Sitterly, J. Mulhouser, C. A. Taylor, D. J. Savage and F. S. Hopkins. The principal activity of these men just now is being centered in a grand ball to be given in Elmwood Music Hall on the evening of National Tribute Day, May 15, the proceeds of which will be donated to the fund. The organization of the function is only one division of the work this energetic committee has in mind for the campaign. New York City is not to be forgotten in the great movement. Affairs in the interest of the campaign are being held almost nightly in Manhattan, or one of the other boroughs.

Yona Landowska

"EARLY in 1915 the Universal Film Company was looking for a dancer who could play an important role in their production, 'The Beautiful Unknown,' someone told them of me, and my debut in pictures followed, and I have remained in them ever since." This is the way that Yona Landowska describes her entry into the field where she has won distinction. "I was born in Petrograd," says Miss Landowska. "We moved to Paris when I was a little girl. I was mad about dancing and pantomime and wanted to study, but my parents would not hear of it. But my grandmother was a famous Russian ballet dancer, and her legacy to me was too strong for them. I made the acquaintance of Madame Mariquita, the famous teacher and ballet mistress of the Opéra Comique in Paris, and she gave me lessons, and laid the foundation of my career.

Yona Landowska.

"I made my professional début in Switzerland, where a gala performance of 'Orfeo' was being given, and in which I had an important role. A two-year engagement at the Gaieté Lyrique theater in Paris followed, and then I had a season at the Apollo theater in Paris. Then I came to America to visit my friend, Madame Fovieri, the great actress, who has made her home here, and she persuaded me to stay—a decision which I have never regretted."

SIOUX CHIEF IN METRO PICTURE.

One of the interesting characters in "The Spell of the Yukon," a forthcoming Metro production in which Edmund Breese is starred, is Chief White Hawk, a genuine Sioux chief. Like many other intelligent Indians, he is a natural actor, and plays a very striking role in "The Spell of the Yukon." He was last seen on the Metro program in "The Lure of Heart's Desire," in which Mr. Breese was starred, and he made such a decided impression upon Mr. Breese that he was secured for his present engagement.

PICTURES AID SUFFRAGIST CAMPAIGN.

The Iowa Equal Suffrage Association in conjunction with a vigorous campaign for recruits and votes in the Hawkeye state is utilizing the picture "The Ruling Power," a Vitagraph three-reel production released through the General Film Service.

Metro Quits Board of Trade

President Rowland Declares Exhibitors Should Have Been Permitted to Share Equally in Trade Board Show.

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has quit the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., and has withdrawn all its branch offices from membership. Metro was one of the charter members of the Board of Trade and was represented in that body by its treasurer, Joseph W. Engel, who has been the board's treasurer since its organization; by President Richard A. Rowland, who was on the board's membership committee, and by Arthur James, who was chairman of the publication committee of the board and a member of the committee on arbitration.

Metro's action followed what it describes as the turning down of the exhibitors' organization by the Board of Trade in the matter of the national exposition. Metro's intention was that the exhibitors, as the founders of the New York annual exposition, were entitled to share equally with the Board of Trade and that anything in the nature of unfair discrimination was against the best interests of the industry.

Metro's letter of withdrawal, which went forward to President J. Stuart Blackton of the Board of Trade on Friday, April 14, was as follows:

"Metro Pictures Corporation, together with all of its exchanges, hereby withdraws from membership in the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., the withdrawal to take effect forthwith. Metro's reason is that it has no desire for further official connections with a body whose recent proceedings Metro regards as against the best interests of the motion picture industry. Metro cites as a case in point the endeavor on the part of the Board of Trade to take away from the exhibitors' organization without fair reason or excuse the annnual motion picture exposition and the board's endeavor to dictate to the founders of that annual institution how if at all the founders should participate in the management and the proceeds.

Metro believes that a "throttle the exhibitor" policy is unwise as well as unjust and desires in its withdrawal to protest most earnestly against such a course. Metro has considered the facts carefully and is satisfied that no course other than withdrawal is honorable to itself or fair to the exhibitors. It is hardly necessary to say that Metro deplores the conditions which have made this action necessary."

Metro at the same time made public its intention to give cordial support to the Third Annual Motion Picture Exposition at Grand Central Palace, May 1 to 6.

"Social Pirates" Strict Test

Stories Undergo Examination by Newspaper Committee in Addition to Usual Tests.

AN UNUSUAL step in the testing of the stories of a production before the actual work of staging began was instituted by the Kalem Company in connection with "The Social Pirates," the current series by George Bronson Howard.

In addition to the usual requirements made by film producers to see that the stories of a production come up to standard, and the signing of so well-known an author as George Bronson Howard, Kalem decided to go a step further before even the first scene was taken for the series. The co-operation of the newspapers in fifty of the cities which had succeeded in making arrangements to publish the stories was secured. Then typewritten copies of the synopses in extended form on each of the productions were submitted to a representative committee.

Thus, all points in the different stories have been threshed out and a severe examination made to insure each story being up to the high standard set. Many valuable suggestions were also received, as a result of the strict before-production tests.

"It has become necessary," declared Mr. Wright, of the Kalem Company, to a World representative last week, to guarantee consistent, unvarying merit in a series production. Expecting two or three very strong episodes to carry the burden for a number of weak ones is not playing fair with the exhibitor or the patron. The few mediocre episodes do not seem so important to the producer who places his valuation on the series according to the strongest, but if they mean two or three disappointed audiences to the exhibitor, he is the man who must pay the cost.

"That is why too much emphasis cannot be laid on the work of before-production preparation. The weak story that is patched up after it has been produced is still no better than mediocre. The mediocre is not what an exhibitor expects or pays for in a widely advertised series."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of April 17 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Molly Make-Believe" at the Strand.

BEGINNING its third year at the Strand, the management offered last week Marguerite Clark in "Molly Make Believe," a film adaptation of the novel written by Eleanore Hallowel Abbott, which has been woven into a photoplay without losing any of its original freshness. Those unfamiliar with the story of "Molly Make-Believe" may be assured that Miss Clarke is given ample opportunity to display her charm and ability. The picture was produced by the Famous Players Film Company. Miss Clark's supporting cast comprises Helen Dahl, Edwin Mordant, Mahlom Hamilton, Gertrude Norman and others.

The rest of the program consisted of a comedy, the Paramount novelty, the Pictograph and the Strand Topical Review. Soloists for the week were Miss Grace Hoffman, Bruce Weyman, Nat K. Cafferty and Master Alfred Newman, the boy pianist.

"The Love Mask" at the Broadway.

The attraction at the Broadway theater was the Jesse L. Lasky-Paramount Picture, "The Love Mask," starring Cleo Ridgley and Wallace Reid. The feature is a drama of the early days of California, written by Cecil B. DeMille and Jennie MacPherson.

Cleo Ridgley is a young girl trying to eke out an existence by panning gold in the days of '49, dressed in men's clothes, and is disguised as "Silver Spurs," a notorious bandit. Wallace Reid as the sheriff has the best part since he appeared with Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen." The settings are both beautiful and unusual; many of the scenes are startling and the lighting is perfect. The program also contained the latest weekly events, colored scenics, short comedies and a cartoon.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

"Sunshine Dad," in which De Wolf Hopper, De Wolf Hopper, Jr., and a well trained lion share honors, was the feature picture of last week's program. A Keystone Comedy and other interesting pictures were included in the bill.

Another Vitagraph at Fulton.

Following a policy of weekly changes of bill at the Fulton theater, the Vitagraph Company withdrew "Salvation Joan," the Edna May picture, on April 15 to give place to "God's Country and the Woman," an eight-part drama. The feature attraction being shown every afternoon and evening is supplemented by several short subjects, including comedies and educational films.

ESSANAY WILL DO MORE ADE FABLES.

A new crop of fables in slang, just raised by George Ade on his farm in Indiana, the state where most of the humor comes from anyway, is being picturized by Essanay. These fables form the best work of this kind ever attempted by this famous author.

The Fable of "The Preacher Who Flew His Kite, But Not Because He Wished to Do So" is the first of the new series.

As laugh-getters these one-reel releases are in a class distinctively their own. George Ade's style defies imitation by any person or thing other than the camera.

The style of construction is to take these clever essays and with each sentence as a subtitle, illustrate its import. They are admirably adapted to filming and, laughable as are the fables in cold print, their comedy is accentuated on the screen. George Ade laughs at them himself, he says. That ought to be guarantee enough.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

TRADE BOARD AND EXHIBITORS CONFER.

Representatives of Two Bodies Hold Meeting and Endeavor to Compose Differences.

THE board of directors of the Board of Trade and a committee of New York City exhibitors held a meeting on Tuesday, April 18, with the object of discussing the differences between the two organizations that have led to the holding of two expositions in New York City.

Several propositions were discussed, with the result that one was found on which both sides seemed to be able to agree. It was said, however, by one of those who attended the conference that it would not be possible to declare the matter settled before Wednesday morning, by reason of an angle of the situation, account of which had not been taken by either party to the meeting.

EXHIBITORS EXPECT BIG SHOWING.

Attractive Program Is Being Arranged for Exposition at Grand Central Palace, May 1 to 6.

UNDER the direction of B. A. Rolfe, plans for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Third Annual Exposition at Grand Central Palace, May 1 to 6, are progressing favorably. Mr. Rolfe sent a letter of acceptance to the exhibitors last week and immediately assumed charge as art governor, calling together the exhibitors' committee and important show interests that had taken space at the exposition.

At a luncheon in the Hotel Hermitage on April 15, Arthur James, of the Metro Corporation, who is conducting the publicity campaign for the exhibitors, gave an outline of the proposed program. There will be six days and nights of carnival in the very spirit of motion pictures, with twelve brass bands for the week. There will be picture exhibitions day and night; dancing every evening; also, as an attraction for the public, three picture studios will be operated at the Palace, where famous stars will appear before the camera.

B. A. Rolfe.

In co-operation with the New York World, there will be a scenario contest under conditions designed to suit amateur writers. The cast must consist of six characters of fairly equal prominence, three of whom will be men and the other three women. No suggestions as to the length of the scenario are offered, but it is understood that no scenario will be accepted which runs beyond three reels (3,000 feet). Authors are particularly cautioned against attempting to film works of fiction which are protected by copyright.

Applications will be received for one week only, beginning on Wednesday, April 19, and ending on Wednesday, April 26. The special Cast Committee will then prepare from the applications thus submitted a list of such applicants as seem suited for the parts in the scenario. These eligibles will then have to pass through a final test under the supervision of a committee consisting of three of the most prominent and popular motion picture actors and actresses. The men and women thus selected will then be put under the immediate direction of an experienced motion picture director who will begin with the work of producing the play without delay.

All of the interior scenes will be taken in the Grand Central Palace in the week of May 1 to 6. No compensation will be made to any of the applicants except the six chosen. The compensation will be fixed in advance by special agreement between the successful applicants and the committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Among the patrons of the exposition are the Universal Film Exchange, William L. Sherry, Metro, American Seating Company, General Electric Company, Precision Machine Company, National Cash Register Company and the Screen Club. It is officially announced that there will be delegations of exhibitors from Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Chicago and intervening points.

The support of the interests represented has been assured for the days designated as follows:

May 1, Monday—Jewish Day.

May 2, Tuesday—Allies Day, for the Red Cross Societies of England, France, Russia, Serbia and Italy.

May 3, Wednesday—German Day, for the Red Cross of Germany, Austria, Bulgaria and Turkey.

May 4, Thursday—Orphans' Day, for the charitable institutions throughout Greater New York.

May 5, Friday—Screen Club Day and Frolic Night, greatest stars of the screen and greatest stars of Broadway participating.

May 6, Saturday—Actors' Fund Day.

The press committee for the exposition comprises: W. Stephen Bush, Moving Picture World; John W. Semler, Motion Picture Mail; Lesley Mason, Motion Picture News; Charles Harvey, Actors' Fund; Sylvester Sullivan, Actors' Fund; James A. Milligan, Billboard; Harry Ennis, The Clipper; Charles J. Giegerich, Morning Telegraph; Arthur Leslie, Motion Picture Newspaper Syndicate; E. Lanning Masters, V. L. S. E.; Arthur James, Metro.

ORGANIZED EXHIBITORS CONDEMN BOARD OF TRADE.

Bronx, Brooklyn and Hudson County, N. J., Exhibitors' Associations Endorse Grand Central Palace Exposition.

AT A LARGE and representative gathering of the organized exhibitors of Brooklyn, held at the Sumner theater, and very briefly reported in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World, resolutions were unanimously adopted condemning the attitude of the Board of Trade and fully endorsing the Exhibitors' Exposition to be held at the Grand Central Palace, May 1 to 6.

The organized exhibitors of the Bronx, at a recent meeting, also adopted resolutions condemning the attitude of the Board of Trade toward the exhibitors and unanimously endorsing the Exhibitors' Exposition at Grand Central Palace.

On Wednesday, April 12, a big meeting of the Hudson County, N. J., exhibitors was held at the Berkeley Club rooms, corner of Webster and Ravine avenues, Jersey City. Addresses were made by W. Stephen Bush, Paul H. Cromelin and Commissioner Burns. The main speech of the evening was delivered by Lee A. Ochs, the president of the New York State Exhibitors' League. After hearing Mr. Ochs, several of the members expressed themselves in unmistakable terms on their opinion of the Motion Picture Board of Trade. Resolutions were offered condemning the action of the Board of Trade in its recent dealings with the exhibitors and fully endorsing the exposition to be held at Grand Central Palace by the Exhibitors' League. These resolutions were adopted unanimously.

CINCINNATI HAS SCREEN CLUB.

Motion Picture Men of the Queen City Form Trade Organization.

THROUGH the efforts of a few leaders among film men and exhibitors in Cincinnati, the Cincinnati Screen Club has been organized, with a membership which already includes some of the strongest men in the film business in this territory, and which will be largely increased through additions from all factors in the trade. The organization was perfected at a meeting held at the Cuvier Press Club on the evening of April 13, following a highly enjoyable dinner. Officers were elected as follows: President, C. E. Holah, Cincinnati manager of the V-L-S-E. exchange; vice president, Charles Weigel, vice president and manager of the Alhambra theater; secretary, W. J. Beyers, of the Cincinnati Post; treasurer, W. S. Wessling, manager of the Pathe exchange. Charter members include the officers named and the following: E. T. Lux, Universal; C. C. Hite, Triangle; R. E. Haines, Mutual; H. L. O'Rear, General; Paul C. Mooney, district manager Fox Film Co.; Gus Muller, Fox; Harry Bugie, George Kleine Exchange; W. J. Fitzpatrick, Standard Film Co.; W. J. Howard, Bluebird; Lewis Baum, World; T. Nolan, Cincinnati Theater Supply Co.; W. J. Wessel, General; George Hummel, Cincinnati Post; Sam Levick, Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune; Roe Eastman, Cincinnati Times-Star and Motion Picture News, and Kenneth C. Crain, Moving Picture World.

In addition to the active charter members named, it was unanimously voted to admit to honorary membership the managing editors of all of the local papers, as the press has been a prime factor in the immense growth and popularity of moving pictures in Cincinnati as well as elsewhere. A unanimous vote of thanks was also passed directed to the several leading moving picture journals, in recognition of their value to the business and their efforts toward its improvement. A similar vote in return for the courtesies tendered by the Cuvier Press Club where the meeting and dinner were held, was adopted.

A number of snappy and interesting talks were heard from the various members present at the initial meeting, Mr. Holah, who has been one of the most active factors in the work of getting the organization together, leading off with a few pointed remarks on the desirability of co-operation between moving picture men and the press, which will be one of the chief aims of the club. District Manager Mooney of the Fox Film Co., who, like Mr. Holah, is an old newspaper man, also devoted some illuminating remarks to this subject. The club was especially fortunate in having Mr. Mooney present, as he has had a wide experience both in newspaper work and in the film business. Manager Wessling of the Pathe exchange, also had some interesting personal experience to contribute to the information of the gathering, as he was for some time located in the Pacific Northwest, where the daily press devotes probably larger space to moving picture matters than that of any other section.

The dinner preceding the meeting was an excellent one, being entirely worthy of the famous Cuvier Club cuisine, and started the affair off in first-class shape. An appropriate touch of a clever nature was found in the place cards. These were typewritten on bits of stock film, which bore the respective names and clever bits of witticism taking off the well-known characteristics of the members.

With this successful send-off prospects for the Cincinnati Screen Club are believed to be of the brightest, and with the promised co-operation of the leaders in the film, exhibiting and press fields, there is not the slightest reason why these prospects should not be fully realized.

HERRINGTON WILL BE AT MINNEAPOLIS.

President Herrington, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, has accepted the invitation to speak before the exhibitors of the northwest at the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the northwest convention in Minneapolis. Mr. Herrington will come to this city May 2.

The Minnesota Metro Service Company has announced that it is arranging for the appearance of Mary Miles Minter and Marguerite Snow to appear at the convention. The Metro company also has signed up for a big booth. Thirty booths have been taken for the show. Contracts have been let for the erection and decorating of the booths, and the advance publicity posters and official photographers have been retained. The railroads are advertising the big May show in their literature and signs announcing the event and the opportunity for the public to see how moving pictures are made and some of the stars as well are being posted in all stations within a distance of 700 miles of Minneapolis.

What We Are Trying to Do

By Rupert Hughes, Author of "Gloria's Romance."

THE best that the motion pictures have achieved is mighty good. To deny this is to criticise yourself rather than the pictures; to substitute stubbornness for intelligence. The worst that the worst motion pictures have done is mighty bad. Yet it is no worse than the worst that has been done in the other arts. Nothing could be.

The cameramobile has opened long-closed worlds of human life to expression; it has made possible the picturing of our existence in ways that never have been, never could have been, seized and presented by any other art. The demand for genuine art, craftsmanship, imagination, observation, drama, comedy, literature, is being supplied more and more honorably. In the shorter forms, the one-reel, two-reel, five-reel pictures and the feature films that occupy a whole evening, some of the creators have accomplished splendid things that would adorn any art.

Rupert Hughes.

There is a general feeling that the serials have not done their opportunities full justice. The difficulties and anxieties are great and there is a natural temptation to feel that in a continued story the interest can only be held by piling crimes on mysteries and mysteries on crimes. As a matter of fact, there is nothing that tires people quicker than an overdose of excitement. Too many killings are more wearisome than none at all. The European war has proven this.

With a few exceptions, the serials that have been offered to us thus far have been largely made up of mysteries that were too artificial to interest us long.

Invitations to write such serials have been extended to me, as to most other authors, and very glittering terms offered. But I am not interested.

When, however, an opportunity came to write a serial for Miss Billie Burke, the situation was different. She is not only a famous beauty, but an actress of unusually thorough schooling of magnetism, high spirit and peculiarly human appeal. She has also an extraordinarily flexible pantomimic gift, and what is known as "screen value" to a degree that might be called "screen genius."

With great enthusiasm I undertook the task in collaboration with my wife, who has been of greatest help to me in my other work. We have omitted the usual master criminals, the secret panels and the ghoulish gangs. We have laid most of the scenes in an atmosphere of wealth and beauty, but we have tried to avoid the usual ridiculous millionaires of the film. Our heroine has adventures and we hope that they will be interesting—we know that they are not impossible.

"Reel Life"

A New Single Reel to Be Released on Mutual Program by Gaumont.

CARRYING out President Frueler's desire that Mutual pictures shall have the utmost variety, the Gaumont company will begin May 7 the weekly release of a single-reel to be devoted to outdoor life and events under the name of "Reel Life." This is comprehensive enough to include whatever the motion picture camera can catch from the minute activities of colonies of ants to the manoeuvers of mighty armies and the peculiar customs of savage tribes.

The first "Reel Life" release will be Sunday, May 7. On that day the new single-reel will show three interesting subjects. These are "Feats of Horsemanship by Belgian Cavalry," "Butterfly Life" and "Alligator Farming." The Belgian cavalry are shown in some of the evolutions which have made them famous all over the world. Butterfly life from the caterpillar to the "winged beam of sunlight" is not only entertaining, but enlightening as well.

Chicago News Letter

NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS' BIG SHOW.

Chamberlain and Van Duzee Visit Chicago, and Enthuse Over the Greatness of the Coming Convention and Exposition in Minneapolis.

By James S. McQuade.

D. W. CHAMBERLAIN and C. E. Van Duzee, secretary and treasurer, respectively, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, arrived from Minneapolis on Friday, April 14, and spent a busy time in the city until the following evening, in the interests of the fifth annual exposition and convention of that organization, which will be held from May 2 to 5, inclusive, in the National Guard Armory, Minneapolis.

When seen, they informed me that before leaving their home city one-third more space than was sold altogether at last year's exposition and convention had been disposed of, and that they are only getting started. The attendance of exhibitors will fully treble last year's figures, they assured me. These exhibitors will attend from nine states, including Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, Montana, Washington and Minnesota, and the states of Illinois and Missouri have also promised to send representatives.

While the program calls for a lot of hard convention work, Mr. Chamberlain told me that ample entertainment will be provided for visitors. Prominent among the divertissements will be Governor's Day, on May 2, when a great turnout will be made to honor the state's chief executive, who will deliver an appropriate address and then meet the exhibitors personally at an informal reception; a midnight frolic will be held in one of the large downtown theaters on the evening of May 3; a banquet at the West Hotel will be given Thursday evening, May 4, and a grand ball will close the convention and exposition on May 5.

The grand march will be led by two prominent photoplay stars (their names being withheld until later), and the surprise created by their presence will be all the more enjoyed, because unexpected.

The exposition will be given in the National Guard Armory, the floor of which will permit the drilling of an entire regiment, and at the same time afford ample space for a large gathering of spectators. Applications for space at the exposition have been pouring in for quite a time from manufacturers of supplies, film men and every department of the trade. Mr. Chamberlain declared that representatives of such concerns will come from a territory as wide as from coast to coast.

The sessions of the convention will be conducted on a strictly business plan, as time will be conserved to promote the best interests of the organization and thus insure to members at all times the necessary service. This policy is declared in advance, as many exhibitors at last year's convention were dissatisfied with the work accomplished, due to an unnecessary waste of time.

F. J. Herrington, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has already accepted an invitation to attend, and his address and advice will be awaited with great interest, as he has familiarized himself fully with the conditions governing the exhibiting department of the trade throughout the entire country, and is heart and soul with his brother exhibitors in every state. That old war horse of Chicago exhibitors, William J. Sweeney, will also attend to aid by his counsel and experience.

Certain Chicago Exchange Managers Form a Social-Business Club.

About two weeks ago, while a party of exchange managers in Chicago lunched at the Hotel Sherman, a second meeting was arranged to take place at the Reel Fellows' Club rooms, on the evening of April 11. The object was to form a social club of Chicago exchange managers and to utilize their association as club members in any way that would benefit the distributing business in this city.

At the last meeting, J. L. Friedman, of the Celebrated Players Film Company, was elected permanent chairman and H. A. Spanuth, of the Central Film Company, permanent secretary.

The members of this social-business club, which has not yet been christened, are divided into five classes, designated after the various kinds of film service handled, namely, the weekly program, the regular weekly, the state right, the local service and the occasional national release service. A committee was then formed of members elected by the various classes mentioned.

On this committee the various classes are represented as follows: The weekly program by E. C. Jensen, of the World and Equitable, and I. Van Ronkle, of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.; the regular weekly by L. Laemmle, of the Laemmle Film Service, and L. A. Getzler, of the Mutual Film Corporation; the state right by H. L. Wallick, of the Reliable Film Brokers, and W. H. Bell, of the Bell Feature Film Company; the local servite by J. L. Schweitzer, of the Aetna Film Exchange, and the occasional national release service by J. M. Hayes, of the Picture Playhouse Film Company.

J. L. Friedman, permanent chairman of the proposed club, then appointed I. Van Ronkle to act as chairman of the committee. This committee met on Thursday noon, April 18, at the Movie Inn, and will report to the next regular meeting, which will be held in the rooms of the Reel Fellows' Club, Tuesday, April 18.

The following were present at the meeting held April 11:

E. C. Jensen, World and Equitable; I. Van Ronkle, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.; George L. Levy, New Film Corporation; L. A. Getzler, Mutual Film Corporation; L. Laemmle, Laemmle Film Service; W. H. Bell, Bell Feature Film Company; J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Film Company; H. A. Spanuth, Central Film Company; Simeon B. Greiver, General Feature Film Company; F. L. Flaherty, Universal Booking Office; H. L. Wallick, Reliable Film Brokers; I. Maynard Schwartz, Reliable Feature Film Company; I. H. Kuh, E. L. K. Film Company; M. Lewis, Lewis Film Corporation; J. M. Leaveston, Lea Bel Company; W. E. Belford, Chicago Kriterion Film Company; J. M. Hayes, Picture Playhouse Film Company; Paul H. Bush, United Photoplays Company; Thomas F. Fleming, Eagle Film Manufacturing & Producing Company; Theo. Aaron, Eagle Film Company; M. G. Watkins, American Standard Motion Picture Corporation; Jos. S. Schweitzer, Aetna Film Exchange; C. B. Hoy, Hoy Reporting Service; Watterson R. Rothacker, Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company; F. L. Boutell and H. W. Drucker, Drucker & Boutell, attorneys-at-law; F. W. Wild, Jr., C. S. Wertsner & Son; L. B. Shafford, Barker-Swan Film Service, and John Hughes, Optigraph Company.

Harry Weiss, of the Metro Pictures Corporation, was absent, owing to the illness of his mother; but a letter expressing his regret at being unable to attend and declaring that he was with them heart and soul in their proceedings was read at the meeting.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Merle E. Smith, supervisor of the George Kleine exchanges, tells me that letters have been coming into the Chicago office from all parts of the Middle West concerning pre-service bookings and the general release of the Billie Burke moving picture novel. During the week ending Saturday, April 15, Dee Robinson, owner of the Apollo theater, Peoria, Ill., closed for the pre-service booking, and arrangements were being completed for similar service with large theater owners in St. Louis, Milwaukee, Detroit, Indianapolis, Des Moines, Kansas City (Mo.), Minneapolis, St. Paul and Omaha. The general publicity campaign for the Billie Burke features will begin shortly, and it will encompass the entire country in a striking and effective manner.

Robert R. Levy, president of the Revelry Theater Company, this city, won out as Republican committeeman for the Third Ward, in the recent national primary election. His numerous friends congratulate him on his success.

Following the production of "The Crisis," by the Selig Polyscope Company, will be the film dramatization of "The Garden of Allah." The photoplay of this great spectacle is at present being written by Gilson Willets, the well-known author and photoplaywright.

Wednesday, April 19, will be Film Players' Night at the Chicago Reel Fellows' Club, at 17 North Wabash avenue. An a la carte dinner will be given on the balcony of the Movie Inn, at that address, at 6:30 p. m. A buffet luncheon and refreshments will be served in the clubrooms from 9:30 p. m., on. It will be a stag affair and special invitations have been issued to every actor, producer, manager and other studio men from the Essanay, Selig and American plants. A special reminder has been given all the Chicago Reel Fellows to attend the Palace theater Monday night, April 17, and give Richard C. Travers a royal send-off in his first Chicago appearance, in his own vaudeville sketch.

E. H. Spears, director of the research laboratory of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, paid us a visit one day last week. The company's new plant, he advised us, will be opened shortly. Mr. Spears subscribed for the Moving Picture World, of which he is a constant reader.

E. H. Montagu, European agent of London for the Selig Polyscope Company, writes the home office that the Selig comedy series, "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," have made a big hit in the British Isles. Mr. Montagu has issued a booklet of fifteen pages which bears the title, "Welcome to Bloom Center," to meet the big demand for the film. It is attractively illustrated with scenes from the rural comedies, and the cover has characteristic pen and ink sketches.

Selig's new twelve-reel de luxe edition of "The Spoilers" recently broke all records at the Lyric theater in Minneapolis, at an admission of 20 cents. The big popular feature was shown to more than 6,500 people in one day at that theater, and Manager Prosper Schwie was obliged to continue his last presentation after 11 o'clock p. m. It had a week's run at that house. Amusements states that the latest edition of "The Spoilers" is showing to enormous business in every city and town in the Northwest where it is being shown, and this extraordinary popularity follows in places where the original nine-reel production had been repeated again and again. At the Strand theater in St. Paul the twelve-reel edition also broke all records for that city.

The Minneapolis Screen Club has now been successfully launched on what promises to be a gratifying career. At a luncheon in the West Hotel, on Monday April 3, the following officers were elected: President, D. W. Chamberlain, of the American Amusement Company; vice-president, James Keough, of the Strand theater; treasurer, S. A. Louis, of the Rialto Theater Supply Company, and secretary, Thomas J. Hamlin, editor of Amusements. On the board of governors are Joe Van Meter, of the General Film Company; Fred Meyer, of the Laemmle Film Service; Bert Barnett, of the Famous Players, and William Koenig, of the Gayety and Jitney theaters. The members of the board have selected suitable quarters for clubrooms in the Radison Hotel, which is centrally located.

The run of "The Ne'er-Do-Well" at the Fine Arts theater, which began Saturday, April 8, under Alfred Hamburger's management, has surprised everybody who was not acquainted with the fine merits of that production. Mr. Hamburger states that in the whole history of the theater such crowds have never been seen as those which have jammed the lobbies daily, awaiting their turn to see the films. Even "Neptune's Daughter," which broke all records two years ago, was eclipsed by the attendance. Between five and six thousand people saw "The Ne'er-Do-Well" on the opening day, the largest attendance the theater has ever had. "This is a remarkable showing, in view of the numerous theaters presenting pictures at this time as compared with two years ago," said Mr. Hamburger. The opening of the second week's run has been marked by the same large attendance.

Miss Mabel Normand and Miss Sampson stopped over in this city Monday, April 10, for a brief stay on their trip from New York to Los Angeles, where Miss Normand will appear in a four-reel comedy drama by Thomas Ince. They were entertained at luncheon in the Hotel La Salle by Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Hately. Mr. Hately is the personal representative in Chicago for H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation.

Judge Walker of the Circuit Court, this city, on Saturday, April 8, ruled that the Harper theater could not reopen, on the ground that the Supreme Court had already passed on the matter. This is the second time the owners of this theater have lost a court fight to compel the city to permit the operation of the theater, which is within 200 feet of the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church.

It has been learned from a reliable source that Jones, Linick & Schaefer paid V-L-S-E., Inc., $2,500 for the exclusive privilege of running Charlie Chaplin's "Carmen" at the Studebaker, La Salle and Bijou Dream for a run of two weeks, beginning Saturday, April 15.

Felix F. Feist, well and popularly known in film circles in Chicago, spent several days last week in conference with the officials of the Chicago branch of the World Film Corporation, of which Mr. Feist is general sales manager. While here, Mr. Feist announced that the position of district manager has been discontinued by the corporation. W. W. Drum, district manager of the Middle West, has been transferred to the Pacific Coast, with offices in San Francisco.

D. J. Chatkin, vice-president of the United Film Service, was united in marriage to Hannah Ferguson, of this city, on Wednesday, April 12. The ceremony took place at the Ashland Club House, where the bride and groom were attended by their relatives and a host of friends. The happy pair will leave Chicago, about April 20, on a trip to the West, and will visit the San Francisco and Seattle offices of the United Film Service. Mr. Chatkin intends to add another branch to the United Film Service by establishing an office in Juneau City, Alaska.

W. H. Rudolph, traveling representative for the American Correspondent Film Company, of New York City, made a pleasant call at the World office on Friday, April 14. The purpose of his visit to Chicago is to dispose of the Illinois state rights for his company's European war film, "The Battles of a Nation," which has had quite lengthy runs in many of the large cities in the East. "The Battles of a Nation" shows the latest German war pictures received in this country. The length is 6,000 feet.

The following bills have been announced at the prominent "Loop" theaters in Chicago for the ensuing week:

Colonial, beginning April 17: "The Children in the House" (Fine Arts), featuring Norma Talmadge, and other pictures.

Studebaker, beginning April 15: Charlie Chaplin in "Carmen," and Marguerite Clark in "Molly Make Believe" (Famous Players).

Ziegfeld, beginning April 17: "The Half Million Bribe" (Metro), featuring Hamilton Revelle, and a French war picture showing the activities of the Allies on the western front and at Salonica. Each of these subjects is of five-reel length, and they will be supplemented by the Ziegfeld topical picture, the whole program occupying two hours and fifteen minutes.

Strand, beginning April 16: "The No-Good Guy" (Kay-Bee), featuring Wm. Collier and Edith Markey, with other pictures.

La Salle, beginning April 15: Charlie Chaplin in "Carmen," Paramount Pictograph, Bray's Cartoons and a Burton Holmes Travelogue.

The Strand Theater Company has decided to terminate its sub-lease of the Colonial theater on Saturday, April 22, and the lease will revert to Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, who announce that they will resume active management of the house beginning Sunday, April 23. It is understood that feature picture programs will be continued, and most likely those of the Triangle brand will be used. The resident manager of the Colonial under the new regime will be Norman F. Field. At first it was rumored throughout the city that Jones, Linick & Schaefer would return to popular-priced vaudeville in this house, but the policy already outlined will be followed, according to direct information from the Jones, Linick & Schaefer offices.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, accompanied by Colin Campbell, the dean of Selig producers, left for Vicksburg, Sunday, April 16. About a week will be spent in selecting locations in Vicksburg and St. Louis, and other points, for the big exterior scenes in "The Crisis." The company will proceed to Vicksburg from Chicago just as soon as things are in readiness by Director Campbell.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

REHEARSING "JULIUS CAESAR."

A Busy Multitude Hard at Work Preparing for Great Shakesperean Pageant.

REHEARSALS of the forthcoming outdoor production of "Julius Caesar," with its notable cast and its chorus of five hundred beautiful high school girls, and gallant youths, are being held in a huge warehouse in Hollywood.

A bird's-eye view of the crowd, with Raymond Wells in his shirt sleeves at the megaphone, resembles the rehearsal of a D. W. Griffith mob scene. Then you see the little pocket Shakespeares in the principals' hands, and hear Frank Keenan's fervent "My Gawd, isn't it good to get back to speaking lines!" You hear the irreverent Hopper say that Caesar's stabbing was something like the Irishman's dilemma when somebody asked him what part of the buzz saw it was that hit him; you hear Theodore Roberts' thunderous Julius Caesar, and William Farnum's full-voiced Mark Antony and, above all, on a packing box, Wells trying to hold in leash his natural directorial instincts and saying prettily to the distinguished actors: "Now, boys, hadn't we better do this thus and so?" and to the high school girls: "Now, young ladies, all together in the dance!" instead of: "Hey, you, come down front into this country; you'll like the climate just as well!" And you realize that you are viewing preparations for one of the biggest productions ever staged in this country.

By a happy circumstance, the seven hills of Rome are reproduced in the location in Hollywood, which has been chosen for the production, or anyway enough of them, so that there will be no trouble in securing sufficient verisimilitude of topography for presentation of the play. The acoustics of the natural walls are said to be wonderful, so that a loud stage whisper can be heard from one end of the amphitheater to the other.

Railroads are preparing excursions and it looks as if this would be one of the greatest attractions of the year for the whole United States.

Maitland Davies, crack critic of the Tribune, Sunday morning in an interview with Marc Klaw, of the firm of Klaw & Erlanger, who is spending a few days at the film capital, told of how Mr. Klaw talked of the drama, picture, and the war. But he showed far more interest in this great spectacle to be shown soon.

"Now tell me something about this 'Julius Caesar' production they are talking about out here," said Mr. Klaw. "It is the most wonderful thing I ever heard of. Well, you may say this for me: It means cutting my visit to Honolulu nearly two weeks short, but I will be here to see it. I would not miss it for anything. I don't know whether the people here realize it or not, but there is not any other place in the world where it could be done the way you say they are going to do it. The idea is absolutely new, splendid and wonderful. As for the people who will take part—you know as well as I do that there has never been such a cast in a Shakesperean drama anywhere. Why don't you tell New York about it? There is not a newspaper there that would not devote columns to it. People will come to see that performance from all over the country if you will only let them know about it. But for heaven's sake hurry up. Give them time to make their plans and get out here. It is the biggest thing that has been undertaken in the whole international celebration of Shakespeare's tercentenary and you are not saying a word about it."

Marc Klaw on Pictures.

"Motion pictures are a distinct art. They must stop their worshipping. They should not copy the speaking drama, but should set out to find a sphere of their own—educational, travel. They should be silent story tellers rather than silent dramatists. The appeal of the motion pictures is to the eye, and the eye tires quickly.

"The motion picture producers have recognized and admitted that silent drama is impracticable by providing musical accompaniment for their screen offerings. Without the aid of music, a film drama is the flattest thing imaginable—absolutely dead. In our own branch of the drama we know that the public demands more than a beautiful picture. We may spend thousands of dollars upon an exquisite setting and if it holds the audience for forty seconds we are lucky. After that they mentally ask, 'Well, well, what next? Show us something.'

"Unfortunately for them, the motion picture producers have not profited by the mistakes of the drama. Instead of avoiding them, they have copied their weaknesses. They let the public know too much. The strength of the drama lies in its illusion. When the illusion is destroyed, you destroy the drama, and the motion picture people are pitilessly destroying illusion by their present methods.

"I suppose I shall be 'roasted' for saying so, but I think the producers are wrong in charging admission to their studios and allowing the general public to mingle with their actors in make-up.

"Where is the illusion after a visit to the studios? On the same lot scenes in Egypt, England, Russia, anywhere, are being photographed. They see the counterfeit settings—massive and impressive where the eye of the camera sees them—cheap, fragile, dream-dispelling everywhere else. Mr. Public goes away skeptical. He does not believe in anything any more. You may show an Egyptian picture with every scene actually photographed in Egypt, but after one visit to the studio, Mr. Wise Layman laughs at your protestations. He knows they were taken in Los Angeles in somebody else's back yard.

"They should stop salary faking. It hurts the business and disgusts the public. I should be interested to see the Government Income Tax reports regarding the fabulous incomes some of these actors are said to receive. Wouldn't there be a howling if the Government insisted on their paying a tax on their published salaries?

"No, I don't believe in censorship. It never did the drama any good and it will not help pictures. It was not the censor who was responsible for the doing away with tights on the stage. Tights went out with the bicycle and its accustoming the public to women's legs. It's all in usage. Bare legs don't shock or fill a theater any more. The women at the beaches have made them ordinary, everyday affairs, and the public does not think anything about them. The final censor and the only effective censor is the public. They are always right and they will not stand for anything that is wrong for any length of time.

"The motion pictures are here to stay, but they are a very long way from having found themselves. A lot of the present producers will disappear before the permanent niche of the picture is discovered."

Quinn Opens New House.

The Empress theater, on South Spring street, opened Saturday afternoon for the fifth time in its thirty-year career, in a new branch of the amusement art—the moving picture.

The old playhouse, once the cradle of Kolb & Dill, which first opened for legitimate drama, then switched to comic opera, turned to vaudeville and closed on boxing bouts, has been completely renovated by J. A. Quinn and re-dedicated to ocular entertainment.

The theater began its new lease on life with a capacity house and "Damaged Goods," a highly complimented program. It will open daily at 11 a. m., and the last show of the day will start at 9 p. m. Popular prices—1,000 dime seats—are one of the drawing cards.

Mr. Quinn is one of the foremost of the veteran exhibitors on the Coast and opens this place with a great host of friends and patrons.

Samuel Goldfish on Coast.

Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. De Mille and Samuel Goldfish have been closeted here after the arrival of the last named director of the Paramount producing firm.

Mr. Goldfish arrived early last week, and as his coming was not expected it was not announced. We met the trio one evening and discoursed the presence of the big man on the Coast. Mr. Goldfish comes west to look after the business affairs of the Lasky Company and to inspect the fine new studio. He is also to be present at some of the Actors' Fund benefits which are to be held here during the month.

Miss Anita King, the Lasky star and Paramount girl, has been having a very busy time. Since she has been appointed a member of the Los Angeles City Mothers' Bureau, life with her has been just one speech after another. Sunday she addressed from the pulpit to the congregation of a church in Santa Barbara; Monday she spoke before the Contemporary Club of Redlands; Tuesday she spoke before the Vocational Club of the Lincoln High School; Wednesday she gave a talk to some of the screen struck girls that are under the care of the city; Thursday she spoke at a benefit for the Jewish Relief Society, and Friday at the Polytechnic High School. Saturday she has been invited to address one of the women's clubs in Pasadena. Outside of this she hasn't said a word. Chief of Police Snively has presented Miss King with a badge of office as one of the members of the executive committee of the Woman's Court. Miss Anita is becoming a well-known young woman in Los Angeles and the surrounding country. She drives everywhere in her fast car, a beautiful white roadster. Everyone is learning to know the snappy looking car and its fair pilot.

In the new Lasky production in which Blanche Sweet is to star, and which is now being rehearsed, Miss Sweet is given an opportunity to wear a number of new gowns. In the past five or six productions she has been appearing in more or less dilapidated costumes. As soon as she received word that she could put on the frills and furbelows, she ordered her modiste up from town and installed her in the big dressing room at the studio.

Another Actors' Fund Benefit.

The Actors' Fund entertainment and dinner dance held at the Hotel Maryland Thursday night was the occasion of the gathering of quite a cluster of theatrical and motion picture face cards in addition to the several hundred guests from Los Angeles and Pasadena.

Charlie Murray, minus his "salary whiskers," gracefully introduced the various "acts," and gave a quick pace to the rolling of the ball by telling some clever "first-run" stories. Marc Klaw spoke eloquently on the subject of the Actors' Fund. Victor Moore "said a piece" in his usual "Mooreish" manner—in fact, he had to take an encore; De Wolf Hopper and May Robson held a little impromptu dialogue, and then each did a recitation stunt; Earl Carroll and Al Matthews warbled some of the "Canary Cottage" songs; Theodore Roberts recited in a way to bring him a lot of applause.

This is the last benefit for some weeks, until the closing benefit show, at which will appear more stars than have ever played at the same house or in fact in the same city at the same time.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Richard Willis and Gus Inglis, of the firm that bears their names, motored to Santa Barbara and back this week. They spent their time looking over their American clients and the studio folk in general.

They passed Johnny Sheehan, the comedian who paid a flying visit to his friends in Los Angeles over the week-end. He has just finished playing an eccentric character part in "The House on Hokum Hill," in which he has lots of fun trying to be an author with an "idea machine." Finally he gets into the clutches of the law, but Johnny's acting makes it all excellent satire.

"Dick" reports that Juanita Hansen, formerly Keystone comedienne, has joined the Flying A force and is busy making a new serial at Santa Barbara.

Rhea Mitchell entertained Fay Tincher at her bungalow for the week-end and they made an attractive and vivacious couple as they journeyed around in Rhea's car seeing the sights. Miss Mitchell has just finished a particularly clever piece of character work in "The Overcoat," in which she had the lead. In this she took on a "tough" mien and walk and just let herself go. The result is a striking performance.

Edward Sloman, Franklin Ritchie and Winnifred Greenwood and a full company went to the Imperial Valley this week. They will enact scenes for the five-reel feature, "The Reclamation," by Kenneth Clark. The scenes show the struggle between desperate ranchers who need water and the ill will of a brute who tries to keep the water from them. Both Ritchie and Miss Greenwood have fine acting moments and Sloman is producing with his accustomed care.

Another feature is finished with Hal Cooley. It is called "The Courtesan." His part is a sympathetic, but exacting, one, and in some courtroom scenes he has to "put over" long speeches as he defended some poor people who could not afford to employ a lawyer. For a change, young Cooley impersonated a man of nearer middle age than youth. He is generally a juvenile in the photoplays.

The other evening at Universal City a gray racer swished in and stopped in the auto park where a gang surrounded it. Harry Carey, seeing the crowd from his dressing-room door, strolled over to have a look at whatever was causing the excitement, and beheld the gray racer with his own name emblazoned in red on its gasoline tank and the same name, but spelled "Hari Kari" in Japanese, on either side of the long hood. The surprise to Mr. Carey was complete and pleasing. It had been arranged for him by his business manager, Melville Jeffrey, who had heard Mr. Carey remark one time that he guessed he would get himself a racer. Mr. Jeffrey's delivery of the ninety-horsepower car was the result and Carey is hoping that the studio race promised some time ago by Mack Sennett will be held shortly, as he believes himself and his Japanese-death car will be the winners.

A new actor, Norman Luke, who has been introduced to the screen via Balboa films, used to be a bank clerk. But he couldn't get money fast enough that way so he joined the "everybody's-doing-it" profession. But he's still a bit bucolic, for chicken-raising continues to be his hobby. He owns quite a bit of prize-winning poultry.

There will be a great time here when the entire Eastern plant of the Universal is removed to Los Angeles. With the installation here of the companies now operating in and about New York City there will be twenty-eight companies located at Universal City. Its only rival in point of size is the foreign plant of the Pathe company.

"Don Quixote," or De Wolf Hopper, listening to the lure of the chinking of much kale, is going into vaudeville immediately following his picture engagement with the Triangle, which ends in August. Hopper has received a big offer from the Orpheum circuit. He states he will appear in a monologue with "Mishaps in the Movies," as his subject, illustrated by films. Hopper, who is recognized as one of the most brilliant speakers among the actor folk, will doubtless make a tremendous success.

After a vaudeville season the genial comedian states it is probable he will star in a revival of "Wang," one of the most popular light operas in which he ever played. "Following which," said Mr. Hopper, "I expect to be in a position to do what I wish, which will be to play on the stage about twenty weeks in the year, and on the golf links the rest of the time."

Another new face at Universal City is that of Andrew Arbuckle, the popular comedian who has severed his connection with the Balboa Company. Andrew is seen in one of his happy parts in "Little Mary Sunshine," which is at Tally's Broadway this week.

As a result of the loyalty of Balboans to their fellow workers, May Brotherton was able to appear at The Times office yesterday and get the automobile which she won in circulation contest recently held. Although not known to the picture fans, Miss Brotherton is an important factor in the making of Balboa films. She is head of the assembly department. Before the contest H. M. Horkheimer, head of the firm, said: "We have all decided to boost for her, and if she loses you can have a new hat, Stetson, too. We are still wearing the old checked cap, but the girl won the car and ought to make up for the lost hat by coming and taking us for a spin in the new car.

Recently the Los Angeles Tribune started giving beautiful photogravures of well known and popular film stars. This Sunday the paper presented a most attractive likeness of Miss Myrtle Gonzales, star in Universal pictures. Miss Gonzales is not only recognized as one of the most beautiful women in filmdom, but is one of the youngest stars worthy the name, and, for that matter, it can be said that she has starred ever since her first appearance at the old Hotchkiss theater, in a benefit performance for the San Francisco sufferers (of the fire and quake in 1906). At that time she, with her sister, Stella, was the "feature" in a bill abounding with talent and the files of the press pay eloquent tribute to her charm. With the years came riper experience.

In painting she attracted the attention of the late Paul de Longpre, was a protege of Schumann-Heink and was always in the eyes of theatrical managers. When the Vitagraph company located in Los Angeles she was engaged to play in stock, advanced to "lead" and in a short time was being featured as a star, a signal honor and a just recognition for so young an artist. Her notable success with the Vitagraph was in "Deception," "The Man from the Desert," "The Sage Brush Gal," "Capt. Alvarez," "Troubled Waters," and "The Chalice of Courage." She is now a featured star on the Universal program and has many warm friends and admirers throughout the land.

Directors of the local chamber of commerce have decided to cause Los Angeles and vicinity to be well represented at the first exposition of the National Motion Picture Board of Trade, in Madison Square Garden, N. Y., from May 6 to 13. Films showing Los Angeles streets, scenic points, good roads and industries, accompanied by a lecturer, will be featured, and the expense is expected to be borne jointly by the industrial bureau, the chamber and the Automobile Club of Southern California.

James Davis has just completed the filming of a one-reel release for the "Hazard of Helen" series. In this episode which is called "The Bridge of Thread," Miss Helen Gibson again takes a desperate chance on a fast running engine. She throws a rope to the brake wheel of a box car which is running away down hill at a terrific speed. Securing the rope to the engine she climbs hand over hand across the rope to the box car. The rope broke twice just as Miss Gibson was about to start across on it, but the third rope held and the scene was made. Percy Pembroke is playing opposite Miss Gibson with George Williams and H. Schum included in the cast.

With the return to the city this week of the Fox Company from Santa Cruz Island, it became known that William Farnum and two other players narrowly escaped death by drowning in the Pelican Bay when a skiff capsized. Farnum was cut and bruised in his efforts to land on a rocky ledge but finally succeeded in pulling himself to safety on terra firma. The two other men were rescued by boatmen. Two cameras valued at $1,000 were lost.

William Collier, the comedian, was nearly smothered to death this week at Culver City while working in a Triangle-Kay Bee subject in which he will be starred. He is playing the part of an inebriate in a new comedy-drama by C. Gardner Sullivan and one of the scenes requires him to be buried beneath a bulky mattress on which a large squad of aborigines leisurely recline. In preparing to film the scene Director Scott Sidney instructed Collier to force his head from under the mattress at the rear in order that he might not find breathing difficult during the action, which was scheduled to be unusually prolonged. The comedian didn't get his head out in time and as a consequence was held prisoner for three full minutes. So loud was the confusion of voices while the camera crank was being turned that the comedian's muffled voice was not heard. Covered with feathers, he was finally extricated from his uncomfortable predicament and allowed a ten minute respite before proceeding with his work.

On Saturday last week Universal City was invaded by the members of Southern California Past Masters Association, their wives and children. There were eight hundred in this party of Masons and they came from all parts of Southern California. More than 150 automobiles brought the Masonic visitors to the Film City, and the parade formed one of the many interesting pictures filmed this week for the Universal Animated Weekly. After having witnessed the making of a number of scenes for the big circus serial "Peg o' the Ring," the visiting Masons and their families were taken through the Zoo and entertained with several wild animal acts directed by Rex de Rosselli; then followed some rough riding stunts by the cowboys of Wallace Kerrigan, superintendent of the Universal ranch. A Spanish barbecue was served at 5 o'clock and, leaving Universal City, the party was taken to the Iris theater in Hollywood where they witnessed one of the latest Universal feature photoplays, "The Pool of Flame," in which J. Warren Kerrigan is starred.

In the two-reel comedy-drama entitled "Shoes" which Lois Weber is producing at Universal City, a number of scenes take place in a five and ten-cent store. Miss Weber tried to have these scenes taken in one of the five and ten-cent stores in Los Angeles, but found that the use of the store could not be had until night, and that it would take two or three nights to make the scenes required. As it was essential to complete the photoplay within a certain time it was decided to borrow some $5,000 worth of stock from one of the Los Angeles stores to use in the scenes. Director Arthur Forde succeeded in making the arrangement and a typical five and ten-cent store was set up on the main stage at Universal City. It took a number of automobile trucks to transport all this stock.

One of the biggest sets ever erected on a stage was put up by James Loy, Balboa's carpenter-in-chief, for the production of "Sultant," a Balboa feature in which Ruth Roland and William Conklin are featured. AUSTRALIAN NOTES

THE initial Triangle features were given a special trade exhibition this week, many pressmen and exhibitors being present. The pictures screened were "The Coward" and "The Golden Claw," Ince-Kay-Bee dramas, and "Crooked to the End" and "The Submarine Pirate," Sennett-Keystone comedies. The reason for showing the two Kay-Bee features is that while Griffith is well-known by reason of his productions, viz: "The Escape," "The Avenging Conscience" and others, Ince is practically unknown, the only picture advertised as his production being "The Wrath of the Gods," screened two years ago. "The Coward" and "The Golden Claw," however, give great promise of splendid productions in the future from the Culver city studios. The press gave favorable criticisms, and "The Mirror," which conducts a most up-to-date motion picture department, said that "Crooked to the End" is the most remarkable picture of its kind yet produced, and I do not think it is far wrong.

The Sydney Morning Herald said: "'The Coward' is a fine tribute to the capabilities of the producer in staging a bewildering wonderful battle scene, with an immense panorama and an army of actors individually lost in the roar and confusion of battle."

The Sydney Daily Telegraph says: "One can only marvel at the magnitude of the staff and the arrangements which must be necessary, and the huge expenditure of money involved in the making of 'The Coward.' . . . The comedy, 'Crooked to the End,' had the audience convulsed during the whole time it was on the screen."

The newly remodeled Triangle playhouse will open on Saturday next, the 18th instant, with "The Coward" and "Crooked to the End."

The prices of admission will be two shillings (50 cents), one and sixpence (35 cents), one shilling (25 cents) and sixpence (10 cents).

Four big Australian productions are under way. The first is the screen version of the play "Emilienne Moreau," which I have mentioned before. This will be released very soon.

Raymond Longford, a most capable producer, with many fine Australian pictures to his credit, is at present engaged on a big dramatic feature, expected to run into six reels. The company is leaving Sydney this month for New Zealand, for some special scenery.

Australasian Films, Ltd., have under way an industrial film, which, when finished, will be 6,000 feet in length. Alfred Rolfe is directing the picture, which deals with all the chief Australian manufactures and products, showing the course of manufacture of wool, etc., from the raw material to the finished article; showing how a gold coin is manufactured, etc., many interesting sections have already been photographed.

Harry Julius, a prominent Australian cartoonist, who has regularly drawn topical cartoons for the leading news-reel here, the Australian Gazette, is at present engaged on a cartoon review of the war. At present Mr. Julius has about a thousand feet finished. This is the first venture of its kind in this country.

Fraser Films, Ltd., are filming a topical-drama entitled "Murphy of Anzac," dealing with the Australian soldiers at Gallipoli. I believe that this picture is three reels in length.

Fraser Films, Ltd., have secured the sole Australian rights for the Broadway Universal Features, Red Feather Photoplays and the Bluebird Photoplays. The first is to be released soon, and will probably be "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," followed by "Business Is Business," "Scandal," "Just Jim" and others at weekly intervals.

Still another picture theater has been opened. The new show is situated in Newtown, a suburb of Sydney, and holds over 1,000 persons. Sydney has now over eighty picture houses in the metropolitan area, which has a population of less than 800,000.

The Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Co., Ltd., which controls several picture theaters in Sydney and Melbourne, is constructing four more houses, one each in Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide and Perth. These will be the most up-to-date in Australia, being remodeled from big New York photoplay houses. Each will seat over 2,000 people.

An extensive advertising campaign is being carried on through the pages of the daily and weekly newspapers. The Sydney Sun, in the issue of Sunday, 12th inst., carried no less than 30 columns—over four pages—of picture advertising. This paper does not have a motion picture department.

War Adds Another Recruit

APPEARING in Daniel Goodman's coming photodrama, "Love's Toll," to be released by Lubin through the V-L-S-E, is Garda Polotskova, taking the role of a Russian dancer, which gives her an opportunity to present in part her well-known portrayal of the Salome dance.

Garda Polotskova.

Mlle. Polotskova, the idol of many prominent artists and sculptors, both here and abroad, including Auguste Rodin, the incomparable, has at last been induced to appear before the camera.

To those who are acquainted with the exotic side of studio life, the name of Garda Polotskova is a byword. Her greatest achievements, as is well known, are Francesca (Stephen Phillips), Mellisande and Electra, none of which have yet been seen upon the screen as interpreted by this eminent artist.

Mlle. Polotskova, who incidentally is a cousin of the Polish Countess Potulicka and a niece of the Baroness de Ricou, is well known and much admired in Continental society. She has expressed great enthusiasm for this new field of work, and is looking forward to the endless possibilities of portraying her individuality which the screen affords.

WALLY VAN FINISHING NEW SERIAL STARRING EARLE WILLIAMS.

Earle Williams is starring in a thirteen-part serial photoplay under the direction of Wally Van, in which the celebrated actor will be seen to wonderful advantage as a motor speedster and a hero of all-around daring. The new serial runs the whole gamut of human emotions, is fraught with a thousand thrills and in spite of the fact that much of the production was made during the winter, it has a bewildering variety of outdoor scenes as well as many sumptuous interiors.

The forthcoming serial will be one of the finest things ever produced. Special diligence has been exercised by Wally Van to have it so, and to make an assured success Williams has been surrounded by a notable cast of Vitagraph players.

CREIGHTON HALE, OF PATHE, BIG HIT IN LOEW HOUSES.

Creighton Hale, of Pathe's popular serial, "The Iron Claw," has been playing the Loew circuit and has proven himself, in the words of the Loew officials, to be "the greatest drawing card we've ever had." "Standing Room Only" signs have been in evidence wherever he has appeared.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

STRAND THEATER, LOUISVILLE, KY.

McRae Brothers Take Over "Dead" House and Convert It Into Prosperous Picture Palace—Has Handsome Italian Stage Setting—Spent Thousands in Remodeling—Dress of Ushers in Harmony with Color Scheme of Interior.

IN the Strand theater at Louisville, Ky., is an instance of an elaborate amusement house, which, after a long series of repeated failures to make good in many and varied attempts, has been conducted into its own at last by the aid of the moving picture. The theater, formerly known as the "Masonic," and incorporated in the Masonic Building, Chestnut street, near Fourth, has been operated since then as the "Shubert-Masonic," or under other hyphenated titles, but throughout its career has never succeeded in establishing itself in popular favor until now. The theater proper is large, and has a seating capacity of something over 1,900. It is attractive from every angle.

A few months ago the McRae Brothers, of Detroit, became interested in the moving picture industry, and while looking over properties in Chicago and other points heard that the Masonic was closed. A trip to Louisville was followed by the signing of a lease for ten years on the property.

Interior of Strand Theater, Louisville, Ky.

The Strand Theater Co. was incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000 for the purpose of operating the theater. The incorporators are M. A. McRae, R. V. McRae and W. D. McRae, all of Detroit. The debt limit of the company was placed at $50,000, and M. A. and R. V. McRae came to Louisville to assume the management of the concern.

The house, when it was taken over by the new company, was in bad shape. Painting and decorating cost in the neighborhood of $25,000. The plumbing, electrical and heating equipment was also in bad condition. New carpets were installed throughout and handsome brass railings with old rose draperies placed behind the last row of seats. The general color scheme was carried out in ivory, old rose and high lighting gold effects. As the screen is the direction in which all eyes are turned especial attention was given to a proper setting. The Italian style of architecture was employed in the stage setting which represents an Italian garden. A four-pillar Italian pergola, all in white, is placed at each side of the stage. A white fountain, lighted by electricity, is placed in each of these pergolas, the fountains, surrounded by artificial flowers and vines, artificial creepers, red poppies, etc., are used in setting off the pergolas and trellises over the pillars.

The gold fiber screen is arranged with an art glass drop, which comes down from the flies. This drop is very artistic, is lighted from behind, and is dropped between performances. Scenery is dropped which blends in with the screen and stage setting. At the front of the stage is a green hedge, which partly conceals the orchestra, composed of eight pieces, using a grand piano. The old orchestra pit has been made very attractive by placing vines and artificial pink chrysanthemums across the lower part of the stage, and placing numerous plants in the open space. An upright piano and violinist's music rack are placed in the orchestra pit, and used to relieve the regular orchestra. The Strand has sixty-four side-box seats, but not one of them has ever been sold, and they are maintained merely as ornamentation.

The house has a total of 641 seats on the first floor, exclusive of the box seats. The mezzanine floor is equipped with boxes seating 136 persons. The balcony seats 470 persons, while the gallery has 596 chairs—not benches. The latter is reserved entirely for negroes and admission is five cents. It is reached from a passageway at the side of the building, and the seats are not sold through the main box office, negroes not coming in contact with the white patrons in the lobby. The balcony is reached by stairs from the lobby, while the mezzanine stairs open from the main auditorium. All balcony and first floor seats are held at ten cents, while the mezzanine brings fifteen. The balcony was formerly ten cents and the ground floor fifteen cents, but prices on the ground floor were recently reduced, as ten cents is the popular price in Louisville.

Instead of locating the projection room on the balcony, as is the case in most of the converted theaters, the booth was placed on the mezzanine floor, giving practically a horizontal throw to the screen. Two Power's motor-driven machines are employed in projecting, and the films are rewound in a room at the back of the mezzanine. The screen being set high and far back on the stage affords an excellent view from every seat, the pitch of the house being sufficient almost to do away with the necessity of removing hats.

Large electric lighting fixtures have been entirely eliminated from this theater. Lighting in the main auditorium and lower floor is obtained by means of borders of small lights over the stage, under the edge of the balcony, around the boxes, etc., and as the globes are all frosted the light is mellow instead of harsh.

Heat is obtained from the power plant maintained by the owners of the building, the heat being purchased by the theater at the usual prices for such service. The company is contemplating the installation of a cooling system to keep the theater cool during the summer months. A few ventilators and exhaust fans in the roof of the auditorium, and large side doors opening on passages at each side of the theater keep the building fairly cool as it is. The exit devices are excellent, there being a number on each side of the lower floor, opening onto passageways, and wide iron step fire-escapes lead from similar doors on the balcony and the gallery.

Guest comfort has not been overlooked in this theater in any department. At the rear of the auditorium on the ground floor is an exceptionally luxurious rest room, equipped with large upholstered sofas, chairs, a writing desk, cheval mirror, and toilet room to the side. A Puro water fountain with glasses is a part of the equipment. Another of these fountains is in the lobby and a third is in the men's rest-room on the mezzanine. A large toilet room for men is also provided in the basement. Even the ushers are "upholstered" in handsome blue and gold suits, with short coats of the page type. Three of these ushers are on the first floor, two on the balcony and two in the gallery.

Business with the company has picked up steadily since the house was opened, during the Christmas holidays, and Sunday has proven by far the best day of the week. The company has confined its advertising almost entirely to the press, and has circulated no paper whatsoever, with the exception of the press, and to people really connected in some manner with the management. However, a new advertising feature has been started in which an automobile will be given away at the end of two months to the holder of a certain coupon as the capital prize. This contest is expected to enliven business to some extent and aid in putting the house in the foremost ranks. Mrs. Charles H. Musgrove, wife of a prominent newspaper man of Louisville, is press agent for the company.

ROSEDALE THEATER, DETROIT.

A Link in the Growing Chain of Handsome Photoplay Houses Owned by William F. Klatt—A Magnificent Structure—Ceilings and Walls Beautifully Decorated—Seats 1,500.

THIS magnificent building, one of Detroit's most beautiful family theaters, is located on Woodward avenue, in the central part of the city's best residential district and seats 1,500 persons. The exterior is a pleasing combination of brick, stone and stucco, being two stories in height. Above the ornate marquis, the window treatment has been carefully carried out, the central portion having a high arched opening with graceful columns resting on a stone balcony, which is surrounded by a beautiful hand wrought iron railing. In this arched opening are golden angels typifying the Drama, Music and the Arts, which are brought out in strong relief by the vivid blue field of the panel. The projecting cornice above the opening is decorated underneath in Italian style with rich golds, browns and blues, roofed above with fine old green tile. At each corner of the building the piers extending above the roof are surmounted by wrought iron and bronze tripods in which is a huge lamping arrangement of 5,000 watts capacity. Connected with these tripods is an ingenious piping arrangement, which is attached to the boilers, and at night a cloud of steam issues from the tripods, making a very pleasing and wonderful effect when the lights are thrown on. The entrance is trimmed and paneled with rich imported marbles, and the woodwork is of mahogany. At the left of the main entrance a passage leads to the second floor where a large private viewing gallery 22 by 70 feet in size has been arranged as well as the office for the theater company. The ticket booth, which is in the center of the main entrance, is built of marble with hand-wrought brass grilles and beautifully carved mahogany woodwork.

Charles McVicker.

After passing the main entrance doors, one sees on each side the huge vento-radiators which the architects have left exposed to view, being protected by wrought brass grilles extending part way up, the grilles being to keep the public from coming in contact with the heated radiators. The floors of the entrance, vestibule, lobby and foyer are of rich red tile with various colored inserts distributed to form patterns. The walls of this handsome entrance and lobby are faced with tapestry brick, marble and stone in very pleasing designs and color combinations. The ceiling of these spaces is vaulted and paneled with rich moldings, and the beams are studded with lamps and embellished with carvings. In the lobby is a beautiful stone pool with clear running water in which gold fish sport about in their frivolous frolics. In the center of this pool is a magnificent Italian fountain richly carved, which was brought direct from Italy by William F. Klatt, the proprietor of The Rosedale, on his recent trip to Europe. At the end of the lobby the floor is inclined with an easy slope to the entrance to foyer, which is through a low, arched opening. On each side of the entrance to the foyer are some platforms where we again find replicas of the ancient Grecian tripods wrought in bronze. In the niches at each side of this entrance are sanitary drinking fountains to which water is supplied from a latest type purification plant. The foyer is a high vaulted room on one side of which is a huge fireplace of tapestry brick and stone. Opening into the foyer from the second floor of the auditorium is a small balcony surrounded by a wrought iron grille. The foyer is hung with magnificent tapestries and artistically furnished with oriental rugs and beautiful upholstered wicker furniture, while distributed about the room are standing lamps and table lamps with beautiful shades made in soft colors which distribute a soft light throughout the room.

The seating arrangement of the auditorium is all on one floor, and the seats have been so carefully worked out that each and every one in the house has an unrestricted view of the entire stage opening. The walls of the auditorium are paneled with rich moldings and the color scheme is beautiful blues, old rose and French grays. The ceiling is one of the artistic and striking features of the building, being skillfully wrought in panels with charming relief moldings and decorated in rich blues, old rose and grays and the fields being done in Japanese gold, the gold leaf being crimped and placed in squares which gives an alternating effect of light and dark gold which is ever-changing. The lighting fixtures are of solid bronze of beautiful detail with glass work done in soft tints and silk shades of pleasing hues.

In addition to the usual emergency lights, there is placed in each corner of the auditorium above the cornice, a large reflector done in the shape of a huge sea shell, the interior of the shells being enriched with gold, reflecting a beautiful soft light throughout the auditorium, so that when the main house lights are off, there is no difficulty in finding seats, yet in no way is the brilliancy of the picture on the screen diminished. The prosecenium arch opening is another feature of the house, being in heavy relief molding, beautifully treated in grays, blues and gold. The arch is bordered with silk velour draperies which tone in with the color scheme of the house. In the orchestra pit is room for twelve mucisians. There has also been installed a magnificent pipe organ which is distributed in lofts on each side of the proscenium arch opening. At the rear of the auditorium the walls and panels are decorated with rich paintings, the work of well-known Japanese artists and imported by Mr. Klatt at considerable expense.

Distributed at various points throughout the auditorium and lobby are large mirrors which the genial and efficient manager, C. A. McVicker says are used fully as much by men as by women. Sufficient exits have been provided and in such accessible locations that the entire house, capacity of 1,500, may be emptied with surprising ease. One the left side of the auditorium is a women's retiring room, handsomely furnished with white and wicker furniture, and the room is beautifully decorated in blue and gold. On the right is the men's smoking room. At the rear of the auditorium, where the balcony would ordinarily be in the second story, are the offices of the manager and the secretary, a private room for the owner and also a private viewing gallery. The placing of this private viewing gallery required considerable thought on the part of the architect, but it has been carefully worked out so that one may sit in this gallery and have a perfect view of the main entrance, lobby, foyer and entire auditorium.

The operating room has also been placed in this balcony, and the equipment consists of two Powers 6a machines, a generator and a motor rewind. The heating and ventilating system is of the latest type, the air being brought from out doors, cleansed and forced through the building, insuring cool fresh air in summer and warm fresh air in winter. The wiring throughout has been done with the best materials, no expense being spared. The building is of fireproof type construction, the floor throughout being of reinforced concrete. The building has a frame of steel, fireproofed with concrete and brick.

William F. Klatt, the proprietor, also operates the Vendome and Jewell theaters in Detroit. The Rosedale was opened in December, 1914, and is today enjoying the best business in its history. Mr. Klatt is among the pioneer moving picture theater owners of Detroit. He started with the Bijou on Monroe avenue about eight years ago and built up a chain of eight theaters, gradually disposing of them until he now has three. He is building a fourth one to be known as The Regent, at Woodward and Horton avenues, which will seat 3,000, and will be devoted to motion pictures.

Charles A. McVicker is the general manager of Mr. Klatt's theaters, and is personally in charge of the Rosedale, where prices are 10 and 15 cents. He is a hard worker and a willing learner with the result that he is proving more valuable every day. He is high in praise of the Moving Picture World, which he says he has found of inestimable value. Matinees are given only on Saturdays, Sundays and Holidays at the Rosedale. There are two evening shows. Pictures are changed daily. The general offices of Mr. Klatt are in the Union Trust Building, Detroit.

PALACE THEATER, WICHITA, KAN.

Exterior Faced With Cream Colored Terra Cotta With Green Trimmings—Handsome Allegorical Painting Representing Comedy and Tragedy Adorns Top of Proscenium Arch—Has Unique Ventilation System.

THE Palace theater which was recently opened in Wichita, Kans., is probably the "last word" in theater construction. The building occupies a plot of ground 125 feet long and 135 feet deep on the main business street. The theater proper is built parallel with the street, the front of the building being occupied by five store rooms. The lobby is 20 feet wide and 40 feet long. On one side there is a tearoom and confectionery store, and on the other a florist's shop.

The front of the building is constructed of terra cotta of light cream colored shade and trimmed in green. Immediately above the entrance to the theater is a beautiful marque decorated with electric globes, and surmounted by a large mechanical electric sign spelling the word "Palace." Two large classical terra cotta lions adorn the top of the entrance.

The first thing that attracts the attention upon entrance is the exquisite decorations and effects. The coloring is in gray and old rose, with a stenciled tapestry effect upon the walls. A genuine work of art adorns the sounding-board above the proscenium arch. It is a large oval painting and is an allegorical representation of tragedy and comedy. It has been greatly admired by critics in both Chicago and Kansas City as a fine example of modern Italian art, and makes a pleasing contrast with the crude theater decorations so common a few years ago.

There are no boxes in the theater; the space which is usually used for this purpose is used on one side as a sound vent for a $10,000 Austin pipe organ, and on the other as an outlet for air, which is exhausted by means of a large fan.

The ventilation of the house has received the most expert attention, and would do credit to many houses in larger cities. No expense has been spared and no feature overlooked to make the air as pure and wholesome as mountain ozone. Around the entire building is a tunnel six feet high and four feet wide. Leading from this at regular intervals are chambers which have vents on the inside of the house above the heads of the audience. Several hundred cubic feet of air is forced into this tunnel every minute. At the entrance is a device which cleanses and cools the air. It is then forced up into the chambers dropping out of the vents and circulated in the auditorium. This system is ideal inasmuch as the cold air drops directly to the floor forcing the warm air up and out through the exhaust chamber which is three stories high.

The house contains 1,500 seats, all of which are twenty-one inches wide. Newcomers can seat themselves with little discomfort to those already located. The comfort of the patrons has been handled with the greatest of care. The mezzanine floor is furnished with beautiful wicker furniture of a light green shade in keeping with the decoration on the walls. The floors are heavily carpeted, adding much to the homelike atmosphere. There is a commodious retiring room for women and a smoking room for men immediately adjacent the mezzanine floor.

The operating room has been equipped with everything necessary for perfect projection. Two new Simplex machines and a Minusa screen is used. Current is supplied by a General Electric motor generator.

The theater was built by the Southwestern Amusement Company of which L. M. Miller is president. Mr. Miller has been identified with many successful theatrical ventures in the West and has operated houses in Lincoln, Joplin, Topeka, and at present is president and manager of the Princess Theater Company, operating a successful vaudeville theater in Wichita. Assisting Mr. Miller in the management of the house is Stanley Chambers, who has been associated with him for the past nine years. Mr. Chambers is well known to exhibitors and other film men, and is one of the members of the executive committee of the Kansas Amusement Association.

The house was opened in the middle of January. The program is changed three times weekly and consists of Triangle, Fox and single reels from Pathe. Music is featured nearly as much as pictures, and up to the present date has received nearly as much comment as the pictures. Ralph Mason Hix, and P. Hans Flath preside over the organ. The management reports excellent business and the prospects for future success are very bright.

RUTH STONEHOUSE IN UNIVERSAL SERIAL.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse has been engaged by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to play the featured lead in the big circus serial, "Peg o' the Ring," which is being produced by Director Jacques Jaccard. In the supporting cast will be G. Raymond Nye, Charles Gunn and Eddie Polo together with a large number of Universal City performers.

R. T. FURMAN LEAVES PATHE.

Mr. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that R. T. Furman, who has been connected with that company for the past twelve months, has severed his connections.

SCHOOL ECONOMY AND REEL LESSONS.

"If you can afford it, buy an economizer." The neat paradox just quoted was one of the bits of advice recently written by our projection expert to an inquiring operator. The economizer he had in mind was, of course, a special piece of electrical apparatus; but the principle stated deserves much wider application. I venture to address the same words to all boards of education and heads of schools, but with this difference—that by the term "economizer," I mean a complete outfit for projecting motion pictures right in your own school auditorium or classrooms. For it is doubtful if the school as an institution will ever be blessed with a more precious tool of economy than the magic reel-picture. Reserving, however, for later analysis the vast pedagogical economies that are possible through effective use of proper films in our schools, I shall here deal with the important question of costs, especially the item of film rental.

To a school assembly of eight hundred a special program of five strictly educational reels (each a fresh celluloid positive from a standard negative) can be supplied weekly at a rental expense of less than one-fourth of one cent per pupil; if four hundred pupils, less than half a cent; if only two hundred pupils, less than one cent! In other words, on such a program the item of rental per run can be set at only one dollar eighty-seven and a half cents, or just thirty-seven and a half cents per reel per run.

Yes, and more: in addition to the mere films, after payment of a yearly circuit membership fee each subscriber will receive a full set of pedagogical leaflets containing various aids to reel instruction, each leaflet being the fruit of personal study of a given film sequence by a group of practical teachers. This feature of the service will very greatly enhance the scholastic utility of every reel in the year's series, for the teachers in various grades and subjects will thereby be enabled to co-ordinate reel lessons with other kinds of school work, study and play.

Certainly the details just given include ample provisions for both economy and efficiency in the regular use of films for distinctively educational ends. No longer should the question be—"Can we afford the expense?" but rather—"With rental so low and benefits so great, should we deny to our children the reel lessons we might now so easily provide?"

However, only through an active co-operation on the part of one hundred or more schools or systems, whose subscriptions must aggregate nearly four hundred runs for each reel during the school year 1916-17, can these benefits be made available. The leading film producing concerns stand ready and more than willing to do their part. They have welcomed my proposal to inaugurate this far-reaching system of circulating uniform (lock-reel) educational programs exclusively among institutions other than theaters. With this hearty co-operation of film producers assured, there seems to be no sufficient reason why hundreds of thousands or even millions of pupils may not be enjoying the blessings of reel lessons weekly throughout the school year 1916-17 and thereafter, if only the authorities having control of the education of these pupils will promptly clinch the present unequaled opportunity. The plan has been worked out in minute detail. The special positives will be ordered printed from the original negatives as soon as the number of runs subscribed for may justify so doing.

If you, Mr. Educationist, following the lead of Comenius and Edison, are sincerely interested in this supreme achievement in educational reel-ism, you may secure on request a formal contract blank containing further particulars. Therein you will find some new details quite as interesting as are the points already specified.

Exhibitors are again asked to call this page to the attention of the leading educationists in their respective communities. By so doing, Mr. Exhibitor, you will earn the lasting gratitude of said leading educationists, the parents, the pupils, and the present writer—who here and now thanks you for generous and wise co-operation in this movement for the benefit of all.

Shakespeare Tercentenary.

Were a strict observance of the calendar, this issue should contain our most extensive comment on existing versions of the plays of the genius of Shakespeare; for he died just three hundred years ago tomorrow. But important and elaborate scenarios of two of his great dramas ("Macbeth" for Triangle, "Romeo and Juliet" for Metro) are still in the studios. In order that our summary may include, therefore, the present year's additions to the list of photomimes based on Shakespearean originals, we shall mark the passing of the day with only this brief notice. With these two accretions added to earlier screen transcripts—"Julius Caesar," "Antony and Cleopatra," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Taming of the Shrew," "As You Like It," "Twelfth Night," "Merchant of Venice" and others—the combined library of Shakespeare films begins to assume creditable proportions.

News-Reel Features.

In each of the five news-weeklies (Hearst-Vitagraph, Mutual, Pathe, Selig-Tribune, Universal) one frequently observes short strips of film having something more than transitory interest. Sometimes the reel's most significant part is not what the editor chose to call its feature item, but these educational nuggets should be preserved regardless of footage. I was recently much interested in seeing an illustration of what can be done by thoughtful selection and arrangement of such clippings. A scrapbook reel assembled by Mr. Delorme, of the General Film Company's Educational Department, contains under the title "Odd and Useful Inventions," a positively thrilling series of glimpses of the productions of inventive genius—water bicycle, dustless street sweeper, giant electric magnet, oxy-acetylene flame cutting steel, motor plow—all of which hold you absorbed with finely intellectual excitement. I doubt if it would be possible to find an audience of sane persons who could fail to find delight in such a reel.

Educational Gleanings.

Of special interest to educationists is the announcement by Mr. Brady that the World-Equitable program is to be enriched by film versions of a number of the greater literary classics, including some of Scott's novels. Let us hope that the spirit of the original will be most carefully retained and that departures from even the details of the tales, themselves almost sacred to many of us, will not be recklessly sanctioned.

Byron's "sofet eyes looked love to eyes that spake again" was slightly misquoted in a sub-title in Pallas's "The Heart of Paula." The screen drama cannot gain and hold the fullest respect of persons of the best culture until all such inaccuracies are eliminated. We sometimes wonder if it ever occurs to producers and directors that it might be well to have their subtitles edited by an expert in English.

The acting of little Rita Connolly as the child Audrey in the Frohman-Paramount picture contains one superb bit of child-psychology, so humanly appealing that it reaches all the way down to the depths of the spectator's nature. I refer to her adorably natural playing with the fringe on her rescuer's jacket even though she was crying all the while as if her little heart was breaking. That fifty feet of film is worth a whole chapter in any text-book.

No wonder Professor Munsterberg is eager to use his phychology films in his own classes at Harvard, for undoubtedly they will be of great value to his students. It will be interesting to watch the spread of this use of films in our universities.

We shall be glad to publish a list of the universities that already possess motion picture machines, if the universities themselves, or our good friends, the exhibitors, near each institution, will kindly supply details.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Want a Club.

JIMQUIN, of L. A., has an idea. It is not the only idea Jimquin ever had, for he is so full of ideas that there are no rooms to let in his attic, but this is an extra good one. Being his own, we'll let him tell it. He says:

> Here's a thing that has been popping into my head every little while lately. Why wouldn't it be a good thing for all concerned to form a kind of organization and call it The American Brotherhood of Live Ones or some such name to designate its nature? Get into it every exhibitor in the country who is interested in progressive picture presentations, having for a backbone the Udells, the Ruffners, the Montgomerys, etc., throughout the country. Make the only dues necessary an original idea once every month or every six months even, just enough to keep them all stirred up to a point of definite competition. It seems to me that it would not only keep a definite object in view for most of them but with a bond of that kind between them they might feel more inclined to exchange ideas freely and this same feeling would naturally extend to personal calls.
> Speaking from my own experience, I had occasion two years ago to make a trip that took me from here north to Vancouver, east as far as my home—Toronto—south to New Orleans and then back here. Now while I made it a point to visit as many theatres as I could in every town I was in, I became acquainted with very few managers—I was not inclined to make myself known to many of them. Whereas if there had been a manager or a number of them in any or all the towns I stopped in who belonged to the Brotherhood I would have felt it an obligation as well as a pleasure to have looked in on all of them. It is reflection on that trip as much as anything else that prompts me to suggest the Brotherhood. It might add incentive to the proposition for the World to give some mark of recognition say every six months to the exponent of the cleverest idea during that time. It strikes me there are a lot of fellows who could be won and held as World boosters on the strength of it. How does it strike you?

Of course the exhibitor has his state organization, but this is not what Jimquin has in mind. His idea is to round up the real live ones, and pin a tag on them. Here's a suggestion. Suppose that the organization be started with the wheel horses and that new applicants be voted upon by those already members. Who would you suggest for charter members? Send in your nominations and let's get something started. We're willing to act as secretary pro tem or ad vitam or any other Latin stuff. No dues or fees but just keep on live wiring. If nothing else is done, those lists should be interesting, and Jimquin only starts with his own nominations. There are a lot he groups under the "etc." Dig out your own list and see how many you can name.

Bleich About Right.

That is no news, he generally is, but this refers to his efforts to get what he wanted for a program. His last is an eight-page folder, pages four by six inches, a page a day, for the Empress, one page for the Queen and the front page. At the top of each day is the full legend, "At the Empress, Saturday, March 18th," or whatever it may be. No turning back to the front page to see what week it is. Each page is complete in itself. He takes a lot of trouble with his time tables, but he writes that next to the attraction, the times of starting is the most important information to the prospective patron, so he gives the time table for each day and makes it stick. He does not say 2:30 and then let you walk in then on the second reel. That is not the Bleich way.

One good point is that at the bottom of each day is a break rule and a few words of comment. These put the punch into the page more potently than can be done in any other way. Get a couple of them.

> What's in a name? "Lydia Gilmore" will not attract through the title any better than did "The Cheat." Many are sorry not to have heeded our warning to see that picture—the same thing applies to this one.
> To disregard a picture like "Temptation" means to deliberately cheat yourself. In the cities you would pay more than double the price we ask and then you would be lucky if the immense crowds permitted your getting in to see it.

There is a whole pageful in that first paragraph. Not many persons would pick Lydia Gilmore as an attractive title. Do as Mr. Bleich does and train your patrons to believe you when you say a picture is good and they will come, no matter what the title may be.

Wants Ideas.

Isaac Peters, of the Princess, Shinnston, West Virginia, sends in his first program and asks for comment. He also asks for comment on a change of service. This is a matter in which we are neutral. We are pretty bald now, and we do not want to be made grey headed, too, by commenting on services. We take it that the local printer is not very well provided with type. If he is, he has loafed frightfully on this job. If he has any more of the type he used for the "People's Bank" in the one advertisement the program carries, he should use that for the "Princess" in the first page layout, adding "theater" underneath. If he has any more display type, he might try to make a better display in the program proper. As it is, he runs along with body type and makes no effort at display. The nearest he comes to display is setting the titles in caps instead of lower case. He could take that same copy and make it look like something, but to do it, he must have the type, and that is probably the rub. Mr. Peters is doing the best he can, and it is probably better to take this than to send the job out of town.

A Kid Circular.

Owing to the fact that he sent in some stuff and asked a question at the same time, we are unable to credit the circular reproduced to the proper person, for the letter was passed along, but the Queen theater, Wilmington, Delaware, farmed out its children's matinee because the management thought it was too much trouble. We regret that we cannot give the name of the enterprising sub-manager, but we can give the very telling circular he used to introduce the idea, an idea which is making good.

Just for the Kids.

> Say, fellows and girls, I want to have a talk with you about the way they are treating us kids on this moving picture business.
> It's lots of fun to go to movies, but most of the time father and mother say that the pictures are not intended for young folks like us, or else we can't go out alone at night or there are lessons to be studied or some other thing that seems to be made to order just to keep a fellow from seeing the movies.
> All this didn't seem just right to me, so I went right down to the Majestic theater and had a talk with the man who runs it and he agreed with everything I said. But he couldn't see how he could help us unless he got up a show just for kids and of course that kind of a show would have to be given at a time when children could come to see it.
> Well, that lets out Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday mornings, because these are school days, and of course after school the regular show is running, so there didn't seem to be any time but Saturday morning.
> "Then again," he said, "there is no use giving a show for children unless the children come to see it, and it ought not to cost more than five cents, and that means there must be an awful lot of them come to make it pay, because the reels and all that sort of thing cost a lot."
> But I kept right on talking to him and told him I was sure if he would get up a really and truly children's show that I would tell all the fellows and girls that I knew and get them to tell all their friends and I was sure if he'd only try it a couple of times he'd soon see the kids would like it so much that he wouldn't have room for all who wanted to come.
> Well, to make a long story short, he said, "Now I'll tell you what I'll do. Next Saturday I will have 'The Wizard of Oz' and a travel picture and some animal pictures and a cartoon or some funny picture and from 9:30 o'clock until 12 we'll run this house just for kids. Fathers and mothers and other grown ups wont be allowed unless they are accompanied by a child, and if their children can't come they will have to bring a note. Now you go out and tell your friends all about it and if enough of them come so that I can pay for the extra films and trouble we'll give a regular show for children every Saturday."
> But I soon found I couldn't tell the story to several thousand girls and fellows one at a time, so I got up this little handbill so that you could all know about it in time and be there just to prove to the man at the Majestic that we think he's just all right and that we do appreciate his caring for us a little.
> Remember now, next Saturday morning from 9:30 to 12 at the Majestic on Market Street near Seventh.
> UNCLE FRED.

It is framed to reach the children themselves and the idea of an anxious parent being required to present a note from a child unable to come if desirous of seeing the performance is genuine humor of the sort that will appeal to kinds of all ages.

Accompanying the circular is a very neat house folder, six pages. If the house will send in a similar program in black on white we will be glad to reproduce it.

Date the Days.

The Lyric, Monon, Ind., sends in a card program with undated days and a rather too casual appearance generally. It seems to suggest that if you are interested, you might drop in some evening, but it does not seek to interest you. A Paramount cut takes the top and one side and the announcement is made that Paramount pictures are shown in the cities at prices ranging from twenty-five cents to two dollars and for a dime in Monon, but there is nothing about the straight program, and it is all set in machine type eight point and printed on a green so vivid that it fades the small type. A lighter tinted stock and a little more talk would work much harder.

Just for Fun.

Just for fun take a sheet of paper, a large sheet of paper, and rule it the long way. Then make these entries:

Gentleman choking a lady.
Lady choking a gentleman.
Gentleman choking another gentleman.
Gentleman biting his initials on a lady's neck.
Ballet girls.
Ladies not more than one-third dressed.
Ladies chasing gentlemen out of their bedrooms.
Vampire ladies (not trying to count Theda Bara.)
Ladies smoking cigarettes.

Tack this on the wall and make a mark at the proper line each time you see such an illustration in cut or poster. Do this for three months. Then write some letters to the makers of the films if you have not already done so.

From Missouri.

L. J. Scott, of the Kansas City branch of the V-L-S-E and editor of The Clansman, sends in some samples of the work of various exhibitors. We're from Missouri, too, in a sense, and like to be shown what exhibitors are doing an_ some of them forget to send in. Will other exchange men please take the hint? Thank you.

Works in Fours.

I. B. Davis, of the Blake, Webb City, Mo., works a set of four cards for all V-L-S-E features, passing out one each night for the four nights preceding the showing of the subject. The cards are plain white stock printed in black and touch on only one feature of the coming subject. If they are printed in sets of four and cut apart after printing the cost is not very great, since the job can be handled as one form, and the value of four different pieces of matter over four pieces all the same is apparent to house managers who have the same people three or four times a week. Mr. Davis guarantees his features, which presumably means that you can have your money back if the show is a disappointment.

Extending.

A. W. Ballenger, of the Dean, York, Neb., has taken over the Opera House as well. When the two houses get in line that house sheet of theirs is going to be a wonder. It's good as it is, but with two houses they can beat the four page issue.

Display.

J. M. Baker sends in a couple of advertisements of the Ideal, Morton, Pa., and writes:

> Can you, through the columns of the paper, briefly criticize these two clippings, or rather contrast them. The smaller one impresses me as being the better appearing. It must lie in the use of type or space as the copy is almost identical. The larger one seems disconnected, and yet I scarcely know what to criticize when I interview the editor. I have received many valuable aids from your department in the past and hope you will find an opportunity to give me a suggestion on this.

"The Beloved Vagabond"

First six-part American drama in color.

From the famous story by Wm. J. Locke, featuring

EDWIN ARDEN

Being the tale of one Paragot, deprived in his youth of his faith in man; of his search for it throughout the land; of his sad return and of something he found in a cottage.

AT THE IDEAL THEATRE, MORTON

Note starting time:

Matinee 2.30 :-: :-: Evening 7.20 and 9.00

First look at the two advertisements. Both are double column, the smaller dropping four and the other about six inches or 75 agate lines. If Mr. Baker paid for 150 lines he has a shade the best of it. If he paid for two sixes he has the small end.

The smaller advertisement was properly set. The printer suited his type faces to the job and the copy that represented the job. He knew what he had to do. He planned his display. The other man seems to have set the larger advertisement without regard for the space to be filled. The copy is almost similar, but there was enough copy added to the longer advertisement to take up the extra space if the printer had been on the job. But he set the lines on the machine to save time or trouble and then had to space out to get enough to fill. He uses a larger type for the top line, and yet he has made a poor selection, for it does not show as well as the similar line in the other advertisement. One seems to be a twenty-four and the other a thirty-six point, but the type only two-thirds the size of the other stands out the better.

The Beloved Vagabond

The first six part American drama IN COLOR.

Produced dy Edward Jose, from the famous novel by Wm. J. Loche, featuring

Edwin Arden

Ideal Theatre

Matinee 2.30 Evening 7.15 and 9.00

Note: On account of length of our program the evening show will start promptly at 7.15.

Motion Picture News says:

So skilled is the adaption and so good the work of Edwin Arden, that the picture is a pure delight. A picture for the patrons of two dollar plays.

Coming down the space, note how one plays up the six-part drama in colors and the other runs for the machine. The third line in the larger ad should have been three lines, a ten point "Produced by Edward Jose" and a twelve point "From the famous story by William J. Locke." It can be done because it had been done just above. Then the last word, "featuring" could have been set in ten point again with the name of the player following in some half way sizable type.

Now compare the two reading banks. The careful man centered the type. He pulled it away from the edge and the white space, getting the emphasis that comes from this isolation. The other man rushed his over to the machine, said double column and let it go at that. To indent means a little—just a little—trouble, so it was not done. Both get three lines, but one bank looks like something. All of the long lines in the larger advertisement are set flush with the margin, running into the matter at the side. Most of the lines in the smaller advertisement are held away from the column rule unless they are big enough to fight.

In a word, one compositor had his heart in his work. The other man does not seem to care, possibly because the big boss doesn't care. No printer who would set that Arden line should be permitted to stand at a case even to the first pay day. He is cheating.

Do not pass this over as one man's troubles. It's something that may be happening to your advertisement. Look it up.

Name the Town.

Because the envelope stuck to the program we know that the Auditorium program comes from Coatesville, Pa. It might have been run on the date line with no serious result, and it would have looked more business-like. It is not really important where a program is intended for local distribution, but it does give a touch of finish to the house name. The program is a four-pager with the program proper on the two inside pages, set as one. They cheat Monday and Thursday a little to let in a Paramount program, and at the same time break the monotony of the page. Then the page is balanced with two cuts in the bottom boxes. As a result, when you open up the sheet the eye is pleased and attracted. It looks inviting. It looks as though the program so well advertised must be good. It is set by a printer and printed by another one, so that it is pleasant to look at. And the titles advertised will back up the first good impression. It is real work.

On the back page there is some clip stuff not well chosen. The fact that a certain player has a dog she calls Wuff-Wuff is not going to help business a lot. It is better to use all house stuff if the clips are not good, and these are very badly chosen from the mass of imbecilic stuff that company press agents put out. They split fifty-fifty with the house and the local column is better done. These are written to make business and the entire space might be used for this purpose. The front page is nicely framed up, and apart from the clip stuff the program is a model, but the editor must remember that just because a man has a job as press agent for a film manufacturer, it does not follow that he is good. This house is run by the Y. M. C. A.

We Wonder.

We wonder just how the Parkway Baltimore, came up with the cut copy they use in a novelty. It shows Mary Pickford getting over the fence as Peppina, but there is a poster dated for the Parkway for the time of her appearance, and her shadow partly covers the bill. It may be a double, but it certainly is well done, as the cut will show. Under is a note. This is printed on pink stock in black and is folded to suggest a note. On the flap of the note is "A Note from Little Mary," also in handwriting. If this is supplied by the Famous Players, it is good advertising. If the house had the hustle to get it up for local use it is still better. We wonder which. In any event they certainly belong to the new club.

No News, but Good.

Allen Jenkins, of the Bijou, Roanoke, Va., sends in a pass card he used for Mary Page. He adds:

> Here is my sure fire crowd-getter for a serial. The idea is old, but it is the cheapest crowd puller I know of.
> I give these cards out on the Saturday before the opening of a serial. It attracts crowds to the Saturday performance and what is lost in money at the first performance of the serial is more than gained on the days the card are distributed. Beginning with the Saturday crowds I keep the cards going until the day before the serial using from 3,000 to 5,000 cards, the usual percentage of return being about 25 per cent.
> Your department of MOVING PICTURE WORLD is always read with much pleasure.

This scheme is recommended in Picture Theater Advertising, and if the serial is of any importance whatever, it is the best way to get the crowd. Get them interested in the first instalment and they will keep on coming. Mr. Jenkins' printer uses such a heavy rule border on one side of the card that we looked to see who was dead, but apart from that, he has delivered a pretty fair job. The card will admit any time up to five o'clock, after which the regular admission goes on for the night shows, which gives a chance to those who would rather pay and dodge the crowds. It might be even better to reserve one afternoon showing for the pay element. Probably you know the theory on which the train candy butcher works. He shows a sample or gives you a taste and then closes a sale. It works just as well with serials. But that printer should be called up and told to compare his six point rule with the linear border on the reverse and be made to promise to sin no more.

Stingy.

Carey Wilson, who is down in Australia for the Fox Corporation (they have an Australian corporation) sends us an invitation to view Fox pictures at the Tivoli, Sydney. The program tells you to "present the enclosed card" at the door, but no cards were enclosed. We suppose that Carey expects us to pay our fare and then dig down for the shilling. We refuse. But he is doing some nice advertising work, the program being something that looks like real money. Even in a Jersey town Mr. Wilson used to do good advertising. He is doing better now in his larger field. We wonder how the Australians like his hats. If he still has that velvet hat with a mane like Paderewski, we bet he is admired.

Good.

We must wag a monitory forefinger at J. Stewart Woodhouse, of the Strand, Milwaukee, who issues a decidedly good house magazine (not merely a house organ) and forgets to date it. But this is what we like about the last issue:

Pictures vs Trademarks

It is frequently asked what "kind" of pictures are shown at the Strand theater. There is but one answer—"The best."

The strand theater exploits no manufacturer's trade mark. There is a reason.

No man is infallible. No body of men are perfect. There is no actor but occasionally falls below his reputation. There is no producer so good but sometimes makes a bad picture. There is no producer so mediocre, but occasionally makes a good picture.

When a theater contracts to present exclusively any "program" or all those pictures produced under a specific "trademark" it is certain that theater will have some poor pictures.

That is the reason the Strand theater has not tied itself to a trademark. The pictures shown here are the best picked from the big field of production. Every picture is personally inspected before shown to the public. Recently when, on the personal assurance of quality from the producer, a picture was advertised without such inspection the management took it off after the first showing because it did not rise up to the Strand standard. And in picking these big features the Strand has chosen from all the "trademark" companies. For instance George Feban in "An Alien," was from one big widely advertised trademark company; "Inspiration," was from another; "The Submarine Pictures," was from another, and Billie Burke in "Peggy" was from still another. Yet in the presentation of all these the only brand attached to them was "Strand Excellence."

The Strand theater gets the biggest and greatest pictures because it is not tied to a trademark and has the courage to pay high prices for big features with confidence. Minneapolis movie lovers will show a patronage warranting this venture.

In an effort to commercialize picture trademarks thousands of dollars have been spent lauding the merits of program organizations. Minneapolis movie lovers have seen the several meteoric careers of these at different theaters and the fact that the trademarks shift from theater to theater or disappear, is evidence that people want more than a trademark.

The picture is the thing. When you come to the Strand you have the assurance you are going to see a first class photoplay. You may even see advertised at some other theater the same stars that have been featured at the Strand, but when you do you may be assured they have fallen below the high standard set by this theater and have been released because found wanting.

Make your house mark your trade mark. Make the house stand as the sign of good shows and you are committed to no particular program. We know that thousands of dollars are being spent right now in popularizing trade marks in general advertising, but the wise house manager will use these brands and yet make them of inferior importance to his patrons than his house. Then, if anything happens and some other management gets the boomed brand, you are still in the ring and as fresh as ever. R. B. Wilby please write.

Clawing Away.

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., simply will not keep out of the limelight. We do not want it to, for that matter, so long as they can deliver the goods. Their last is a card advertising "The Iron Claw." It is done on a bright and yet not vivid blue, a window card with a large cut of Pearl White and the legend and house name. Nothing more. They trust to the cut to do the rest, and probably not in vain. It is a good cut to start with, and it is excellenly printed and the stock on which the printing is done gives it almost the value of a carbon. The excellence of the work lies in the fact that it is not alone well done, but that they keep an excess of type off the card to give the cut a chance.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tell all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 288 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail postpaid $2.00

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing of) photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Revision Schemes.

SEVERAL editors have asked that more attention be paid the revision schemes which are becoming more and more prevalent, and which threaten to become even more of an evil than the schools were. The revision scheme has all of the bad points of the school with the added evil that it is more lasting in its grip on the confiding client.

The school took from two to thirty dollars from the would-be author, sent lesson papers, went through the form of criticizing and then "graduated" the incompetent, leaving him to sink or swim. The revision bureau comes along with glowing promises that it will take the scripts of the disappointed writer and make them salable. There is a certain fee for revision and another for typewriting, and postage must be added if the script is to be offered the market. The revision fee will run from two to five dollars a reel, and the typing about twenty-five cents a page. If the author remits, the script is put into some shape and sent out once or twice. Perhaps it is not sent out at all, but merely filed, to be returned later on to the author with a letter that says that the bureau still believes that the script should sell and urging the author himself to keep on submitting the story. Frequently these letters are sent with the script to editors in the hope of influencing their judgment. We have seen some of the letters and some of the reconstructed scripts and in no case have the ideas possessed any value whatever.

The school has to promise to make "any" person a writer. The revision bureau must fatten on fees and so must enthuse over the baldest and most impossible story. One bureau recently dropped its revision fee for the time being to build business, but required that the author send seventy-two cents "for postage," probably postage used on circulars to other prospects, for apparently this particular bureau does not make any real effort to sell stuff; indeed we know of only one bureau that actually does seek to market material, and this operates a very clumsy selling plan. The others find it more profitable to sit quiet and absorb the postage.

The revision bureaus are objectionable on general principle because they swindle their clients by taking money for services they know to be without value. But in addition they propagate the evils of the schools by continuing the incompetent in the belief that they really are writers and by convincing the disgruntled that only editorial stupidity prevents their selling stories. One man wrote that he had paid nearly fifty dollars to a revision bureau without a single sale. His very letter shows that he cannot possiby write the sort of story that will sell. He is unlettered and unintelligent. He has been "kidded along" merely because he was willing to buy success if he could.

A revision bureau honestly conducted, might make a good story a trifle better through the employment of expert reconstruction writers, but most of them employ half-trained girls and we know of but one that has a bona-fide script staff, and that does make occasional sales, though these sales are surprisingly few in proportion to the percentage of scripts "accepted" for revision.

If you can write the sort of stuff that editors want, you can sell in crude form, and the studio can reconstruct to suit their particular needs. If you cannot write what is wanted, a revision will not help in the least. It will only add to the cost of failure.

Let's Hope.

Here are some rays of comfort from Horace Williams, who writes:

> The scenario question is working itself out, just as the short story question did. Magazines were originally the work of the editor in entirety. Then offerings of contributors began to be considered and now the editor's work is almost entirely selecting what he desires. Free lance short-story writers at first had a hard time, just as free lance scenario writers have now.
> Motion picture companies and their contributors are theoretically together now. Everybody, except a scenario writer just in receipt of a rejection blank, knows that the companies are keenly desirous of new plays. As the free-lance writers perfect themselves, more and more the companies will come to depend on them, and the editorial departments will select from offerings instead of attempting to produce stories. Then when we send in a story about a long-lost brother reaching home in the nick of time to pay off the mortgage, we will get a handsome check from an overjoyed editor, just as we do now from the magazines.

Eats?

How about a dinner of photoplay writers, say about the last Saturday in May, at about two dollars a head? There has been nothing done this season in the way of Inquest Clubs and dinners because of other work, but if you want to sit with your fellows before the summer comes, drop a line to this department and declare in. If a sufficient number will indicate an immediate acceptance, we'll go ahead and fix things.

"Written and Directed By—."

There used to be a rule in the song publishing business that it was not a safe bet to deal with a house where a relative of the publisher kept the royalty statements. It is getting to the point where it is not a good plan to send scripts to companies who offer stories "written and directed by" its staff. Even if the stuff is purchased the original author will not be credited and but little will be bought. It is almost as bad to have your credit stolen as to lose your story.

Cheap Work.

One of the largest companies in the business is buying scripts for ten dollars a reel "for the idea only" and turning out stories so poor that the stock of the concern has become a joke on the curb market. Another company pays less than this, and the other day when an author ventured to suggest to a third, Capt. Wilbert Melville, that thirty-five dollars for a three-reel was rather small he was told that it was plenty for a "mediocre" two-reel padded up to three. If the story was mediocre, why did the studio take it. Does it want to go on record as producing "mediocre" plots?

Red Wagon Logic.

E. R. Akester offers an apt comparison when he writes, in speaking of five-reel plots:

> I remember that along in 1889 I wanted a place as bill poster on the Barnum & Bailey advance cars. I wrote Mr. W. H. Gardner that I could do theater work and had had one year's experience with Sells Brothers. He wrote me to come on. Three days after I reported, at least twenty good men were turned away because the crews were complete and ready for the road. Most of the men turned away were better than I, but I got along because I had first learned to stick one-sheets and threes. In time the twenty-four-sheet stands were just as easy, because I had worked up to them by degrees.
> I had a story "stolen" by the Vitagraph the other day. The only trouble is that I had not written mine yet, but I had the idea, almost character for character. Had I written it out and submitted it, I might have made an ass of myself, for the stories were identical, though mine is still unwritten.
> I've discovered a good scheme. I write my action continuity and put it away. Some time later I write another. Then I compare the two. Often they are very different, and a combination gives a better script still.

Mr. Akester has been working for two years without a sale and he has not kicked yet. An old showman, he knows how to play the game gamely. His scheme of making two or more continuities without reference to each other is particularly good.

Preparedness.

Lay in a stock of paper now. Lately the price advanced 30% and another advance is contemplated. Practising what we preach, we have supplies to last two years, much of it purchased below the current mill price.

But if you get a lot of paper and envelopes, take care of them. Box your paper as well as envelopes, and then paste up each box dust-tight, saving out a sample sheet to paste outside. Done in this way paper stored will keep fresh for a long time if there is not too much sulphite left in the pulp.

Cast Sheets.

It is a fine thing to be able to understand what you read. It has been suggested that the minor characters be given in the cast with the numbers of the scenes in which they play, to provide for doubling. One student, at least, read only half of the advice, and he lists every scene in his five-reel plays for each character. The leads may appear in two or three hundred scenes and these are all marked down. That does not help any. It does help to say that the postman appears only in scenes nine, twelve and forty-three. Then the director knows the actor can double the part of the clerk in scenes thirty and thirty-one.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 134.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What were resolutions may and may not be used in conduit? Why are stranded wires usually used in conduit instead of solid? Where must conduit be used and where may open wiring be permitted?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 127.

The Roll of Honor on Question 127 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; Carl Schmidt, New Ulm, Minn.; Walter Collins, Tiffin, O.; Claude E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Tex.; Bert Meester, Hobart, Ind.; Walter E. Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Alberta, and Charles S. Stuckey, Edmonton, Alberta.

The reply of Brother Hays best suits the purpose of publication.

Reply to Question No. 127.

By Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.

The Question:

What, if any, objection is there to locating a mercury arc rectifier in the operating room? What, if any, objection is there to locating it where it is very cold in winter? Where would you locate it?

The Answer:

The only objection to locating a mercury arc rectifier in an operating room is the slight noise it gives off, and the light; but the operator who has been accustomed to handling A.C., certainly would not mind the noise very much. (The noise would be very greatly increased if the main reactance of the machine was set on a sheet metal floor, or placed near the sheet metal of an iron-lined operating room wall.—Ed.) The light can be made unobjectionable by means of a common dark-colored window shade or two. (These blinds are inflammable and would not be permitted in a city operating room.—Ed.) The correct place for the rectifier is in the operating room, where it will be constantly under the eye of the operator, provided, of course, other conditions are favorable to its installation there. The rectifier may be installed in any clean, dry place, as for instance, in the operating room, in a glass show case in the lobby where the greenish blue light attracts considerable attention, thus providing a little free advertising for the theater; also it may be placed in a window near the street level with the same effect, but don't put it down in the basement and forget about it. Provided the machine be protected from snow, the cold does no harm, except that it may be hard to start the first time each day if it is in a very cold place—10 degrees above zero or lower.

[The ideal way to locate a rectifier is to place it in a corner of the operating room, leaving space enough between the rectifier and the wall to get between, and then box it in with asbestos mill-board in such a way that only the front panel is exposed in the operating room. There must be a door and proper ventilation provided, of course. The light from a mercury arc rectifier, or any other light for that matter, is highly objectionable in the operating room.—Ed.]

Power's Book of Instruction.

The Nicholas Power Company, New York City, has just received from the printer an instruction book, compiled by Assistant General Manager Will C. Smith, dealing with the Power's Cameragraph. This little booklet is leather bound, and contains instructions and illustrations for making the various possible repairs, adjustments, etc., on the mechanism itself, as well as on the speed control. There are also useful tables, parts list, etc.

The book may be had, free of charge, by any operator or theater manager who will address the Nicholas Power Company, stating what theater he is connected with. See back cover page for address of the Nicholas Power Company.

Looks Easy.

L. J. Pratt, Geneseo, Illinois, says:

> When my spot is right on the machine aperture, and I push over to the stereo I have to raise the spot to get a clear field. It is not much trouble, but I have to do it every time I move the lamp. Am using a Power's SixA, installed about three months ago. My idea is that the condensers are not set at the proper height for the aperture. Am I right or wrong? Everything was all right when the machine was installed three months ago (by myself), but it seems to be getting worse.

You say you have to raise the spot, which means you have to lower the lamp. It looks to me as though the arms of your stereo lens had worked down a little, which is quite possible if the slots don't fit the screws closely, and you set it clear up in the first place. It is also possible, though highly improbable, that the bottom of your front condenser lens has worked out a trifle, thus tilting the lens, but that is rather a rank guess; in fact I don't think it could happen. Anyway the thing to do is raise the objective lens a trifle and alter its pitch sufficiently to compensate for the raise. I cannot tell you just how to alter its pitch, but you certainly should have ingenuity enough to accomplish that. You might do it, for instance, by putting a shim under the upper edge of the stereopticon arm where it joins the mechanism. It is just one of those little things, my brother, that you have got to use your brain on, therefore get busy.

Why It Pays.

Many a theater manager with the necessary capital has hesitated about installing up-to-date projection machines or other apparatus, unable to decide the question "will it pay?". Fearing to make the outlay, although freely admitting the new apapratus would be much better than the old.

This question should be an easy one to settle, or at least it is readily subjected to very simple analysis as to probable result. Suppose the theater has an old projector and the question at issue is the expenditure of about six hundred dollars for two modern motor-driven machines.

Capitalists when investing money ask but two questions—first, is it a safe proposition, second, what interest will be returned? This point of view answers admirably in considering the purchase of new machines. Of course we cannot "get our money back" intact, nor do we wish to. The investment is, let us say, six hundred dollars, and the machines will last three years. The repair bill should be no more than for the present projectors, if as much, therefore it may be eliminated from the calculation. Eight per cent. on $600 is $48. One-third of $600 is $200, therefore our two machines will have to give sufficiently improved results to induce added revenue amounting to $248 per year in order to take care of depreciation and pay 8 per cent. interest on the investment. In other words if the improved results will add 75 cents per day to the receipts it is a "good buy," and certainly anything which makes any appreciable betterment in results on the screen could scarcely fail to bring in 75 cents a day additional. This is based on the assumption that the machines will be entirely worn out and of no value at the end of three years. If they have value at the end of that period, that value is must be deducted from the investment.

In the case of current rectifying devices, such as Mercury Arc Rectifiers, Rotary Converters and Motor Generator sets, the necessary added revenue is very much lowered, since such machines cost less and last longer. Assuming one pays $350 for a motor generator. It should last five years, therefore depreciation is only $70 per year, and 8 per cent. on $350 would be $28, therefore the improved results throughout the use of the device would only have to bring in $70 and $28 = $98, or about 33 cents per day, and it would be indeed strange if the substitution of D. C. for A. C. projection light did not accomplish improvement more than sufficient to do that.

A Good Suggestion.

L. J. Shafranek, Cleveland, Ohio, makes the following suggestion:

> Why should people when looking at perhaps a comparatively dark film have their eyes outraged by a pure white sub-title in the center of which will be only a couple of words, or perhaps a line or two of writing or print. I would suppose manufacturers would use a diaphragm of proper size to only allow the wording to show. The effect is very bad.

You are perfectly right, Brother Shafranek; the effect is more than bad, and, as you say, there is no good reason for it. Modern practice calls for high amperage on a semi-reflective screen which means a very brilliant light, and for the eyes to jump from a comparatively dark subject to a blaze of white light is something more than an ordinary strain. Such sub-titles may just as well be white letters on an opaque background. They would be very easy to write, and very, very much less straining to the eyes. Your motion for the elimination of this particular thing is seconded and carried unanimously. It is up to the manufacturer.

A Visitor.

Recently our editorial fourteenth story cubby hole was made cheerful by the smiling countenance of H. J. McKinnon, who, when the editor resigned his position as inspector with the Nicholas Power Company promptly annexed the same for his own private, individual benefit, which same position he has held, with due credit to himself and the Power Company, for something like two years. Now Mac's smile is expansive; also it is more or less cheering, particularly when he has in tow such a scandalously good looking specimen as trod upon his heels that day, the same being William W. Lewis, of San Francisco, California, Local No. 162, who has taken a position with the Nicholas Power Company, as special representative, and is getting ready to start flooding the United States and Canada with Power's Cameragraphs, in which most laudable endeavor we, of course, wish him success. In other words, more Power to him.

In course of Brother Lewis' visit he sprung something that was distinctly new. Lewis thought he had us up a tree, and "you can't give the answer" stuck out all over his Romanesque form. Covering ourselves with buckets of glory, however, we promptly proceeded to fool Lewis and tell to him the why, almost without a struggle. In the picture you will see what the problem was. You will observe that the emulsion on the film, and the celluloid itself is scorched, but that the figures which are dressed in white are sharply outlined, and not in the least injured. Why is this so? I will leave it to the correspondents of the department and see if they can catch the idea. It is simple and quite plain to one who really understands the action of light and heat, but may prove to be quite puzzling to those who don't. Now come across with the answer.

In closing I wish to Brother Lewis every success in his new occupation. He is one of the "reg'lar fellers," and I believe will prove to be a popular salesman, which means, of course, a good one.

From Griffiths.

Concerning certain articles which have recently appeared in the department Brother John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, comments as follows:

> Regarding your comment on my criticism of Friend Martin's article, page 2175, December 18th issue, it seems to me you missed the real point he was trying to make when he suggested the ground glass stunt. As I understand the article he was under the impression that certain rays were traveling from the condenser through the film and reaching the condenser in a direction which did not agree with the true action of the objective lens, and he suggested the ground glass as a remedy for this condition. As you say, rays passing through the film from the condenser cannot be focused at the screen without the aid of the objective lens. But right there is where the rub comes in, because Brother Martin assumes these rays to reach the screen through the objective lens in the form of wasted light, they being supposed to carry no image, but affect the picture the same as would light from an open window. What Martin means by the "direction of the rays not agreeing with the true action of the objective lens," I do not know, because from the ground glass we would have rays going in every direction from every point of the glass (in other words diffused light.—Ed.), so therefore how can any ray from the condenser pass through the film and reach the objective in a direction that does not agree with the true action of the objective lens?
> I certainly congratulate Friend Martin on his very excellent drawing. You will observe the rays passing point O in his drawing are only passing a part of the crater to a part of the spot, whereas if he had located it at the back surface of the lens it would have carried the whole crater to the whole of the spot, and consequently would have carried a full film image to the objective lens, and crossed it at the condenser image. Both point P and S carry full film images, but neither of these cones meet at the condenser image, therefore they only form parts of sets of rays that cross at the rear surface, and to meet at the condenser image, hence the logic of only considering those rays that do cross at the rear surface.
> I cannot very well comment on the aritcle by H. H. Monyer, of Kansas, because the bi-concave lens placed as shown is not in evidence. Any irregularity in the thickness of the celluloid would certainly interfere with the definition, though if the added thickness be even it would not. It would, however, take the "eye of an eagle" to distinguish any difference, but the narrower the angle of the cone of rays from each point of the film the better the definition will be; in fact increasing the distance between the condenser and aperture is equivalent to stopping down the lens without the consequent loss of light. Will comment on Friend Armstrong's data later.

This letter came just on the eve of my departure for the west, and it was impossible for me to look up, and check up Brother Griffith's statements, therefore I cannot make intelligent comment.

Storage Battery.

G. V. Humphrey, Brooklyn, New York, says:

> On page 774, February 5th issue, Brother Bowman asks for storage battery dope. This gave me the idea that perhaps other readers of the department may have use for something of that kind, and acting on that assumption, I have produced the following. I have tried to be as brief as possible, since I know the claims there are on space in the department.
> The storage battery has become such an article of every day use that it would be well for us to have at least a general knowledge of its care and operation. Space will only permit us to review the kind most commonly met with, that is the lead type storage cell.
> The storage battery does not store electricity, it stores nothing but chemical energy. In charging, electrical energy is transformed into chemical energy and stored in the cell; in discharging, this chemical energy is changed back again into electrical energy. Since one cannot get more, or even as much, out of a cell as you put into it, no cell can ever be 100 per cent. efficient (X 1). So the charging voltage must be higher than that supplied by the battery on discharge, this is due to the voltage used to overcome the resistance of the battery itself. A good battery averages 75 per cent. efficiency.
> The storage battery is made up of a number of positve and negative plates immersed in diluted sulphuric acid; this solution is called the electrolyte. The groups of positive and negative plates have suitable terminals to which connections can be made. These terminals are usually plainly marked and care must be taken to connect the battery properly. The positive plate is a reddish brown color and the negative a dark gray. These are inclosed in an acid proof container.
> The capacity of a storage battery, that is, the amount of energy which can be stored in the cells, is measured in ampere-hours and is usually based upon an eight-hour discharge rate. For example, a 200 ampere hour battery would deliver a current of 25 amperes for 8 hours. Theoretically, this same battery should deliver 50 amperes for 4 hours, or (X 2) 12 amperes for 6 hours. But as a matter of fact the ampere hour capacity of a battery decreases as you charge (X 3) or discharge it faster than the normal rate. Most automobile type batteries have (X 4) a 4 hour rate.
> The electrolyte should be made with pure distilled water and sulphuric acid, one part of acid to six and a half parts of water. The acid should be poured into water, never pour water into acid. The density of the electrolyte differs with the various makes and types of batteries and is specified by the manufacturer, and it governs to a great extent the operation of the battery. If too dense, the electrolyte tends to evaporate more rapidly, sulphatation is facilitated and the plates are liable to rapid depreciation. The density of any substance is the ratio of the weights of equal volumes of the substance and water. For example, if the specific gravity of a certain quantity of acid is 1.25 (or 1250 as it is read on the hydrometer scale) it means that a certain volume of the acid will weigh 1.25 times as much as an equal volume of pure water. The specific gravity of the electrolyte should be from (X 5) 1.215 to 1.220 when the cell is fully charged, according to the make of the battery, and it will vary with the amount of charge or discharge. The plates should always be covered with the electrolyte, the water of which evaporates and should be replenished from time to time (X 6).

Storage batteries can be charged only with direct current, and care must be taken to have the positive wire of the charging source connected to the positive terminal of the battery, and the negative wire to the negative terminal of the battery. The polarity of the line may be found by putting a suitable voltmeter across the line and noting the deflection of the pointer, or by dipping the two live wires into a glass of water to which a teaspoonful of table salt has been added. The ends of the wires must be kept apart to avoid danger of a short circuit. Fine gas bubbles will be given off from the negative wire.

In caring for storage batteries, both a voltmeter and a hydrometer should be used. A hydrometer is an instrument used to determine the specific gravity of the electrolyte.

When a battery has to be charged the first thing to know is its ampere—hour capacity; this is usually marked on the name plate. For example, consider a battery having a capacity of 80 ampere hours, divide the 80 by 8 (the rate of charge and discharge) and we find the battery will deliver 10 amperes for 8 hours. This then is the amount of current to be used in charging (X 7). Diagram A shows how to charge a battery from a 110 volt lighting circuit. Carbon filament lamps connected as shown should be used as a resistance to cut down the line voltage to that necessary for charging the cells. This arrangement of lamps is called a lamp bank. First connect the lamps as in diagram B, then turn in lamps until the current taken by them from the line equals that required to charge the battery at its normal rate. For the battery we are considering, an 80 ampere hour one, 20 sixteen c. p. lamps or 10 thirty-two c. p. lamps would be necessary. (Note: A 16 c. p. carbon lamp takes one-half an ampere, and a 32 c. p. lamp takes one ampere.) After the charging current has been adjusted with the aid of the lamp bank, the battery may be connected in the circuit as in diagram A and charged for 8 hours.

A few rules regarding the care and operation of storage batteries will not be amiss here.

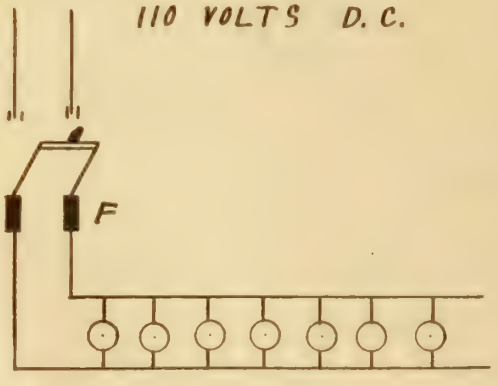
Do not under or overcharge a battery (X 8).

Do not charge or discharge too quickly (X 9).

Do not allow a battery to remain discharged for any length of time (X 10).

Do not let the electrolyte get below the tops of the plates.

DIAGRAM "B"



CARBON FILAMENT LAMPS.

Keep cells clean and allow no foreign matter to get into the electrolyte.

When cleaning batteries, never let the plates be exposed to the air. Put them in a bucket of clean water until ready to put back.

Watch for a white sediment which accumulates on the plates or at the bottom of the jar, called sulphation, which will short circuit the plates or cause them to bend out of shape. This distortion of the plates is known as buckling.

Always maintain the (X 11) specific gravity at the proper value for the type of cell, take hydrometer readings frequently (X 12).

Always keep the temperature of a battery below 100 degrees Fahrenheit.

Investigate as soon as there are any symptoms of trouble and remove the cause.

I referred Brother Humphrey's article to Mr. J. P. Lyons, of the Electric Products Company, who is thoroughly acquainted with storage batteries, their construction, and their operation, asking him to read the matter over carefully and make such criticism as he thought applied. In the body of Humphrey's letter will be found references X 1, X 2, etc. These refer to items in the comments by Friend Lyons.

Now this is the end of reel one; reel two follows immediately in the shape of Mr. Lyons' comment:

> I have carefully gone over the paper on Storage Batteries and find several points that seem to need more elucidation, as well as several slight errors, which I have marked on the manuscript X 1, X 2, etc., and will take them up here on numerical order.
> X 1. He states that on account of a storage battery cell being less than 100 per cent. efficient, the charging voltage must be higher than the discharging voltage, which is not correct. As a matter of fact, the actual ampere hour efficiency of one of the standard makes of lead storage battery cells will average 95 per cent., while its watt-hour efficiency will be in the neighborhood of 75 per cent. to 80 per cent. as he states further in this same paragraph. Therefore, the lack of efficiency in the cell requires that more ampere hours shall be put into it than can be taken out of it, likewise more watt hours. The fact that the charging voltage must be higher than the discharging voltage has nothing whatever to do with the efficiency of the cell, and is simply due to the fact that we must, of course, impress upon the cell a higher voltage than its own in order to produce any flow of current into the cell, and the greater the difference between these two voltages the greater will be the flow of current into the battery.
> X 2. The theoretical discharge rate for 6 hours should be shown as 33 1-6 instead of 12.
> X 3. Here is the statement "the ampere hour capacity of a battery decreases as you charge or discharge it faster than the normal rate," which is partly correct and partly wrong, and is a good place for a little explanation of charging practices.
> For instance, as in the case of a standard vehicle battery, with a normal starting rate of from 29 to 56 amperes, say, depending upon the type and size of the cells and the number of plates, it is entirely feasible to start the charge at approximately 4½ times this normal starting rate, and it is being done in many places in this country today where proper equipment is installed. This is known as constant potential charging, and is done by means of maintaining at all times throughout the charge an impressed voltage of 2.3 per cell. The steady maintenance of this voltage throughout the charge results in automatically starting the charge at approximately 4½ times the normal starting rate, and in a gradual tapering of the rate throughout charge until at the finish the rate will be approximately ½ of the normal finishing rate. The normal finishing rates on these batteries vary from about to 8 to 16 amperes. The net result of this procedure is that, while the charge starts at a very high rate, the taper is so proportioned that the charging current is at all times automatically kept below the gassing point of the battery and the charge is secured with practically a complete absence of gassing and with an exceedingly low temperature rise. The chief engineers of the leading manufacturers of lead storage batteries have given their unqualified support to this method of charging and have thoroughly demonstrated that it is the most efficient and will greatly lengthen battery life. Such a method, of course, is not of interest in single battery installations as a rule unless a direct current line of proper and very steady voltage is available, and I have simply mentioned this to show that a battery's efficiency is not decreased by charging it at the beginning faster than the normal rate. It is a fact, however, that finishing the charge at more than the normal finishing rate will reduce efficiency, as represented by a comparison of amount of current put into and taken out of the battery; it will also cause excessive gassing and frequently overheating of the battery. After all, the best indication of the proper rate of charge is the gassing of the battery; whenever a battery begins to gas it is a positive indication that current is being forced into it faster than the ability of the plates to absorb it, and the rate should be lowered. Under heading X 9 I will make a few more remarks concerning rates of charge and rates of discharge, along this same line.
> Discharging a battery at higher than normal rate does cause a decrease in the number of ampere hours to be gotten out of it, in direct proportion to the amount of increase in discharge rate over the normal. For instance, a battery with a normal discharge of 25 amperes for eight hours, would discharge at 50 amperes for only about 3¼ hours, etc.
> X 4. He states that most automobile batteries have a four-hour discharge rate. I think it would be well to explain that this refers to the electric automobile driving batteries particularly, and not to the starting, lighting and ignition cells.
> X 5. He states that specific gravity of electrolyte when fully charged ranges from 1.215 to 1.220, which is wrong. Taking the standard makes of lead storage batteries, you will find that the Gould, the Exide, the Willard, the U. S. L., the General Lead, etc., have for years past adopted a standard density for fully charged battery of 1.280, while the Philadelphia Storage Battery adheres to 1.300 as maximum density.

He says further that this maximum density will vary with the make of the battery and with the amount of charge or discharge, which is an ambiguous statement. As a matter of fact, the maximum density of the electrolyte in a standard NEW battery will be either 1.280 or 1.300, according to the make as mentioned above, and it is not proper to say that this will vary with the amount of charge or discharge, as we are talking only about the density when fully charged. I have specified a NEW battery above, as the maximum density will vary with age and general condition of the battery plates, though in a battery properly cared for and properly charged it will, throughout its life, be in very close proximity to that when it is new.

X 6. In speaking of replenishing the electrolyte, he should be more careful to say that it must be kept above the tops of the plates by means of adding distilled water ONLY, as more damage to storage batteries in this country has been done by the ill-advised addition of acid than by any other means during the past few years. As a matter of fact, it is never necessary to replenish the acid portion of the electrolyte so long as a battery is properly charged and does not suffer spillage or leakage through cracked jars, etc. It is, however, often a great temptation to the battery man to bring up the gravity of a sulphated battery by simply adding acid, rather than subject it to extended charging at very low rates, which alone will break down this sulphation and bring out from the plates all the acid absorbed thereby.

X 7. This would give the impression that an 80-ampere hour battery would be properly chargeable by giving it a charging rate of 10 amperes continuously for 8 hours, which is wrong for two reasons; first, the ampere hour efficiency of the battery is slightly below par, requiring more than 80 ampere hours to recharge it, and, second, because at the finish of the charge a rate of 10 amperes would probably cause excessive gassing and he has overlooked the finishing rate which should always be lower than the starting rate. See X 9 below.

X 8. He says here "Do not under or overcharge a battery." I quote from the Chief Engineer of one of the leading battery manufacturers mentioned above: "While undercharging, if continued indefinitely, is seriously detrimental to a battery, at the same time regular undercharging, if mixed with regular periodical overcharging, is extremely good for it."

In explanation of the above; my own experience has been, especially in the charging of single battery installations at rates in the neighborhood of the normal starting and normal finishing rates prescribed by the battery manufacturer, that stopping the regular charge just a little before reaching the point of complete desulphation and then every four or five charges giving the battery an overcharge at a low rate, below the gassing point, until reaching the maximum gravity has resulted in a wonderful increase in battery life and mileage efficiency. The increase in battery life is because in this method of regular charging the charge is stopped before the gassing commences and results in a practical elimination of gassing except possibly a little bit during the periodical overcharges, and in mileage efficiency because the lead battery's efficiency on charge is very high right up to the gassing point but drops markedly upon reaching or exceeding the gassing point. Another of the leading battery engineers of the country, a man with years of experience in one of the principal Exide stations, told me recently that over 90 per cent. of their trouble was due to the fact that their batteries did not receive this periodical overcharge in the hands of many users. So, going back to the statement in this paper, undercharging need not be detrimental to the battery if mixed with proper periodical overcharging, while a proper amount of overcharging is essential to get the best results and the most life from the battery. The only overcharge that will damage a battery is an overcharge at a rate that will produce and maintain excessive gassing. For instance, I know personally of many battery charging installations in the country where the battery gets an overcharge nine times out of ten when it goes on charge, but the overcharge is always at so low a rate that never a particle of damage is done to the battery; such unnecessary amount of overcharging, however, naturally reduces the operating efficiency and it is for that reason that many installations are of the automatic cutoff type with arrangements to automatically administer the overcharge of whatever desired length of time on the occasions when it is desired.

X 9. He says, "Do not charge or discharge too quickly." This is another statement that is at variance with the ideas of the leading engineers of the storage battery manufacturers of this country today. It is true that with the storage batteries manufacured ten, or even five years, ago it was wise to adhere pretty strictly to the rates of charge then specified by the makers, but progress in this line has produced plates of much more rugged construction, and I quote from another of the leading engineers from an address before Electric Vehicle Association a few months ago: "We have removed the ban on discharge rates, and also on charging rates with the single stipulation that the charging rate must be low enough to prevent excessive gassing during charge." This simply means that we may safely discharge the battery at any rate desired, so long as we do not over-discharge it, that is so long as we do not continue this beyond the point of proper discharge, which is 1.500 to 1.600 gravity. And it means that we may start the charge at whatever rate our charging equipment will give us as a maximum, providing we have made proper arrangements for the reduction of this rate of charge just fast enough to keep it below the rate that will cause gassing of the battery. For instance, I can show you a charging equipment in Brooklyn where it is common practice to "boost" lead batteries at 75, 100 and even 150 amperes at the start: I can tell you an actual experience of a friend of mine who went into a garage in Worcester with his battery completely discharged, put his car on charge right across the bus bars of the generator, regulated his rate by field rheostat only, started his charge at 180 amperes, reduced it from time to time during 46 minutes, until at the end of that time he was charging at 40 amperes and no gassing yet, took off his car at that time and drove it 45 miles on these 46 minutes of charging. Or, you can see an installation in Detroit Service Station in Cleveland where these big 42-cell passenger cars come in entirely discharged, are placed on charge at from 125 to 140 amperes and the average time elapsed to full charged condition is 4¼ hours, the taper being such that the finishing rate averages about 5 amperes and there is never a sign of gassing and a negligible temperature rise.

X 10. I would add here that not only does it cause a sulphation or hardening of the battery plates when a battery stands discharged for some time, but in cold weather the battery is apt to freeze up and crack the jars, as when the battery is discharged the fluid portion of the electrolyte is little more than plain water.

X 11. This statement about sulphation is not exactly correct. Sulphation, caused by repeated undercharging or by leaving a battery standing in a discharged condition, results in the deposit of a whitish substance on the surface of the plates, which is more or less insoluble and becomes so to a greater and greater extent as the battery stands in this condition. It seldom, however, comprises any noticeable percentage of the sediment in the bottom of the jar, and seldom, of itself, is able to accomplish a short-circuiting of the plates. It can only be dissipated by continued charging at very low rates, or in extreme cases by scraping the plates themselves and then going through the necessary cycles of charge and discharge to get battery back to its full or approximate capacity.

The sediment, which appears as a dark muddy substance in the bottom of the jar, is composed of particles of active materials dislodged from the plates, and its accumulation is greatly increased by finishing the charge at too high a rate, producing gassing and overheating of the battery. This sediment will, in time, rise to the bottom of the plates and cause a short circuiting thereof, when it is necessary to take down the battery and wash it thoroughly, removing all of this accumulation.

Buckling of the plates may be caused by overheating of the battery through too high finishing rates of charge; it is seldom today caused by excessive discharge rates except in some inferior makes of batteries. Witness the performance of the better types of self-starting batteries, with normal discharge rates of very modest figures which are repeatedly every day discharging for short periods at rates ranging all the way from 75 amperes to 125 and 150 amperes, and in some cases even more, without apparent damage to the batteries. It is an excellent commentary on the progress made in the past few years in lead storage battery construction.

X 12. Here again it would be well to lay stress upon the maintaining of the specific gravity by proper charging and not by the addition of acid, except in case of actual loss of electrolyte through spillage or leakage. One of the leading battery manufacturers of the country prints at top and bottom of its booklets for distribution among the owners, in red letters: "Do not add acid to the electrolyte of your battery; use only pure distilled water." It would be well also to specify that water for use in the battery should be kept only in a glass or earthenware vessel, never in anything made of any kind of metal.

I hope you will pardon the length of this commentary, Mr. Richardson, but there may be some of the points brought out that will be of some interest or benefit to you. Storage battery engineering has come in the past few years to be a distinct line of endeavor and there are few who have not given the whole or the greater part of their time to it who have kept up with the rapid progress that has been made, both in the construction of such apparatus and in the best methods of use, charging, care, etc.

I shall feel amply repaid if I have been able to be of any service to you, and shall be glad to have you call upon me for anything further that I might be able to do for you. This paper did not specify whether it was dealing with lighting, power or other types of batteries, and there are naturally a great many differences of construction and handling in the various types, but the remarks I have made above apply pretty generally to all except the very smallest types in use.

This article is very long, but it is practically the first thing we have ever had on storge batteries, and, inasmuch as, in many instances, particularly in Ohio, the operator is called upon to handle storage batteries, it seems to me that the space is well expended. I cannot presume to comment, because I do not feel sufficiently well posted to take issue with either one of the gentlemen as to the points raised.

Back Focus.

John Solar, Watertown, New York, says:

I haven't forgotten my promise to contribute on the back focus. I concluded to study and investigate the lens farther before writing on this subject. I find that investigation and study on this subject simply continues to call for more. I have devoted every spare moment during the past three months to this subject, and have learned many important points, but not, by any means, all.

Referring to your comments on Friend Griffiths' recent article: You say: "Certainly the rays of light which actually pass through the film cannot have any power to form the image on the screen without the aid of an objective, and are not and cannot be focussed on the screen." You put this in a different form than Martin; he says: "Carries no definition from the film."

We cannot project an image on a screen at a distance without an objective, but not from the absence of an image. If we had a screen large enough to take the image projected, and could pass enough light through a small aperture, we could project an image at a distance without any objective. In my letter commenting on this article of Martin's, I gave a demonstration (or instructions for a demonstration), of images projected on a screen without a lens. You and Friend Martin tell us that light does not act so and so, but you do not tell us how it does get there. When an actual demonstration is not accepted as a truth the situation is somewhat difficult.

Well, Brother Solar, I read your letter on board train near Quincy, Ill., and cannot make intelligent comment, since I have not the letter you speak of at hand, therefore I won't try, but pass it on to Friend Martin. If I am in error in saying that an image is not and cannot be formed by a condenser located at a distance from the object, why all right, but it certainly would require a demonstration (don't remember you having given one, but—maybe), to convince me of the fact.

Big Lenses and Travel Ghost.

There have been many inquiries as to the effect of stopping down lenses of large diameter. Many operators complain that with the large diameter lense there is tendency to travel ghost. This to a certain extent is true, but if you will stop and think there is no necessity for large diameter lenses except where the operator is unable to obtain a sufficient distance between the apex of the front condenser and the film, or where the focal length of the lens is quite long. In the first instance the fault lies in the apparatus, and cannot be remedied except by changing the machine itself. In the second instance, whereas the large diameter is necessary to accommodate the light beam at the back end of the objective, it will be found that the beam at the front end of the objective is quite considerably smaller in diameter, and I would suggest that, under these conditions, the operator, with the lamphouse pulled back as far as it can be gotten (the condition which obtains in practice with long focal length lenses), and the objective in position which places the picture in sharp focus, project the white light to the screen and blow smoke into the light ray in front of the objective. This will outline the ray and we can measure its diameter and insert a diaphragm in the front end of the objective which will reduce its diameter to the diameter of the actual light ray at that point. Where lenses of this kind are used there frequently is travel ghost due to reflected light, and this diaphragm will put a stop to that, without in any way altering or reducing the actual projection light.

The conditions under which any kind of machine may work are so varied that it is utterly impossible to give a rule which will cover them all. The foregoing simply spells common sense, and its application in cases of this kind will invariably be found to be beneficial, or at least if it does no good it certainly will do no harm.

And, while I am on this subject, let me say that any projection machine with which the operator is unable to obtain at least 24 inches between the apex of the front condensing lens and the machine aperture is not a machine which can be used to advantage under all conditions. Machine manufacturers might as well wake up to the fact that it is imperatively necessary that the operator be able to obtain not less than 22 inches between the apex of the front condensing lens and the film, and the quicker this change is made the better for all concerned, since anything less than this means waste of light where the focal length of the objective is even reasonably long.

Educational Division.

G. H. Humphrey, secretary, Local 337, Utica, New York, says:

Local 337 wishes to thank you sincerely for your most successful visit to Utica. It presented us an opportunity, which we believe we took advantage of, to prove that Utica operators are a live bunch of men. Since then we have not rested on our honors, but have started a school, secured rooms for the same, appointed instructors, and hold classes every Monday evening. I am enclosing check for $4.00 for the Handbook and $3.00 for a year's subscription to the World for these rooms. Kindly send the Handbook to my address and the World to the Educational Division of the local union No. 337, I. A. In closing I wish to say in behalf of Local 337 that you will always be assured of a hearty welcome in Utica. Nothing would please the boys better than to see you up here some time next summer on the go-devil.

And here is a little smile. One of the paint dealers in the city remarked, soon after your visit: "What's getting into you operators, all buying black paint at once?" So you see we are speedily remedying such things as you criticised.

I am glad to see the local starting an Educational Division. Go as far as you like in that direction, gentlemen. It cannot fail to benefit you. It is a pity that some other locals I could mention don't take similar action. The good Lord knows they need it badly enough. However, generally speaking, there has been a very large tendency, during the past two years, to discard the "down-with-knowledge" idea, and step up to a higher level of technical education in the profession of projecting moving pictures.

During the coming summer the editor will visit all eastern cities north of and including Washington, D. C., using the Go Devil for transportation. It is quite possible I may include Utica a second time if L. U. 337 really wishes it, but inasmuch as a trip covering the entire South, West and Noth is planned for next winter, I'm not anxious for any extra engagements. This winter trip will include about seventy cities, and be about 10,000 miles in length, requiring fully 90 days.

Can You Beat It?

O. P. Sammons, Hollis, Okla., writes a letter, one part of which says:

I enclose advertisement clipped out of our local paper. Some competition is it not; eleven reels for five cents? Things are dull over in these parts, and they claim it is on account of the high price of film service.

The advertisement in question reads: "Dreamland. Eleven reels five cents."

No, the dull business complained of evidently is not on account of the high price of film service. I would rather say it was on account of the fact that the Hollis managers are injuring their own business by surfeiting their patrons with an enormous quantity of films at a low price. It is an absolute fact that where a patron, who might attend a properly projected five-reel show at a ten-cent admission twice every week, won't attend more than one show a week if he sits through an eleven-reel show at five cents; also the presumption is that the eleven-reel show is very poorly projected, because, allowing an average of eighteen minutes to the reel, it would take 198 minutes, or exactly three hours and ten minutes, to run a show of that length; and since no theater in the world can afford to run a five-cent three-hour show, very naturally they "speed 'em up," which operates against the moving picture as a form of amusement, and thus tends to decrease the patronage.

A MULTIPLICITY OF REELS AT A LOW PRICE IN THE LONG RUN OPERATE DIRECTLY AGAINST THE THEATER, NO MATTER FROM WHAT POINT OF VIEW YOU LOOK AT IT. The theater manager who does this looks at only one thing. He is running perhaps a five-reel show and patronage drops off. Instead of trying to project his picture better, or perfect the details of his theater management, he takes what looks to him like the easiest course, and "adds another reel to the program." Of course this does induce added patronage for the time being, but he loses sight of the fact that the patron who comes to a long show has his appetite for moving pictures dulled for several days to come, and thus the theater manager who adds reels to his program beyond reason is watching the spigot carefully while leaving the bung-hole wide open.

But you may say "The Birth of a Nation" runs two and a half hours. Yes, quite true, but you must neither forget or overlook a few things in this connection, one of which is that "The Birth of a Nation," and similar productions, cannot in any way, shape, manner, or form be compared to the ordinary five-cent picture show; also those who see "The Birth of a Nation" pay from fifty cents to two dollars, and this is a very different proposition to five cents—very different, indeed.

A Foolish Blunder.

Owners of the new Handbook will please turn to Figure 92, Page 236, and switch the names, placing voltmeter where ammeter is and ammeter where voltmeter is. How such an utterly absurd blunder occurred is beyond my comprehension. The draftsman is the goat, but nevertheless I should have seen the mistake myself in reading the proof, but I didn't. It will, of course, be corrected in all books sent out from now on, but present owners will have to make their own correction in pencil.

Toning Motion Picture Films (Continued).

As previously mentioned, single solution baths are not intended for use at very infrequent intervals. In such cases two-solution methods should as far as possible be employed, although it has only been possible to recommend the latter for the production of green and blue-green tones.

Copper Red Tone. Red Chalk Color. Use a snappy, rather dark positive with this bath. After immersion of the well washed film in water for one minute, place in the following:

Potassium Citrate	6 lbs. 4 ozs.
Copper Sulphate	1 lb.
Potassium Ferricyanide	1 lb.
Amonium Carbonate	8 ozs.
Water to	10 gals.

Dissolve each ingredient separately in as little water as possible, mix the filtered solutions so obtained in the order given, and dilute to the required volume. The ammonium carbonate should be almost transparent, and free from white powder.

To obtain the best results the bath should be employed at 70 degrees F. At higher temperatures inferior results are obtaind and at 80 degrees F. the bath is useless.

Tone for twenty to thirty minutes.

Washing should be continued until the high lights are perfectly clean, which usually requires from ten to fifteen minutes.

With use, the bath precipitates a brown sludge of copper ferrocyanide, and in consequence becomes weaker by virtue of the loss of copper. Ten gallons of the solution will tone about 1,000 feet of film without revival, but as soon as the bath shows signs of weakness it should be revived by adding separately one-quarter the above amounts of copper sulphate, ferrocyanide, and ammonium carbonate, dissolved in as little water as possible—omitting the potassium citrate.

The bath will not keep more than a few days even after being so revived. In view of the relative instability of this bath, it is more economical to employ a wooden drum immersed in a shallow tank (using fresh solution as soon as exhaustd in place of the usual "tank and racks."

Uranium Red Tone. Brownish red color.

Use a rather thin positive as this bath intensifies slightly. Immerse the well washed film in the following:

	Avoirdupois.
Uranium Nitrate (Neutral)	3 ozs. 150 Grs
Potassium Oxalate (Neutral)	3 ozs. 150 Grs
Potassium Ferricyanide	1 oz. 150 Grs.
Ammonium Alum	8 ozs.
Hydrochloric Acid 10 per cent	6 ozs.
Water to	10 gals.

In view of the fact that the nature of the tone is influenced largely by the acid content, it is very important that the uranium nitrate should contain no free acid, and this may be assured by neutralizing a solution of the same with dilute ammonia until a slight permanent precipitate is obtained.

It is most convenient to keep stock solutions of the above (say 10% solution) wherewith a new bath may be expeditiously compounded. A 10% hydrochloric acid solution is one containing 10 parts by volume of the acid per 100 volumes of the final solution.

Slight variations of temperature around 70 degrees F. produce no apparent effect.

Tone for ten minutes. Since this and the following single solution methods of toning produce a marked intensification of the silver image, which intensification increases with the time of toning—it follows that the nature of the tone changes with the time also.

The composition of the bath has been so adjusted that the maximum effect is producted in about 10 minutes, the tone passing through a series of changes from brown to red during this time.

Although it is possible to obtain intermediate tones by withdrawing the film from the bath at shorter intervals, the tones so obtained are not so "plucky," and it is almost impossible to duplicate them a second time. Experience has shown that modifications of tone are best obtained by keeping the time of toning constant and varying the nature of the toning bath and that of the positive film employed.

Wash from ten to fifteen minutes.

Usually the high lights will become clear in the above time, though a thin yellowish brown veil invariably remains in the clear gelatine as a result of the intensification of minute traces of fog. This is of no account, however, in projection. If the bath is working correctly this yellowish veil is only just perceptible, but should it be at all marked, then either the film was fogged during development, or the bath was not compounded correctly. Washing should not be carried out for too long a period, especially with water inclined to be alkaline, because the toned image is soluble in alkali.

Ten gallons of solution will tone about 1,000 feet of film without any appreciable change in the tone, after which the rich tone tends to become flat as a result of a deficiency of acid in the bath. At this point the bath may be revived by the further addition of acid to the extent of the original amount employed, when a further 1,000 feet may be toned. After this stage the richness of tone falls off rapidly and the bath should be thrown away. In view of the sensitiveness of the bath to acid, the importance of the neutrality of the ingredients is at once apparent.

Used intermitte tly over a period of several days, the life of the bath is approximately the same.

With continued use a slight brownish flocculent precipitate may form in the bath, but this should only be slight, otherwise it is caused by incorrect mixing, the action of light, or by contact with a metallic surface.

Uranium Red Brown. Reddish Sepia Color. Use a positive that is a full shade lighter than a normal black and white of the same subject. The formula employed is the same as for Uranium Red tone, but contains only half the amount of hydrichloric acid. The instructions to be followed are likewise as for Uranium Red Tone.

In view of the less energetic nature of this bath the life is slightly longer than that for Uranium Red. If after 1,000 feet of film has been toned the bath is renewed with acid to the extent of then 10 gals. of solution will tone 3,000 feet of film.

Sepia Tone by Uranium and Iron. This particular tone is obtained by suitable admixture of red and blue toning solutions. By varying the proportions of these baths, tones from red sepia to brown may be obtained.

The following is only one of the many tones to be obtained by this method. Increase in the proportion of the iron baths makes the tone colder and vice versa.

Use a postive that is a full shade lighter than normal.

Immerse the well washed film in

Solution for Uranium Red Brown	9 vols.
Solution for Iron Blue	1 vol.

The instructions regarding method of procedure, life of bath, etc., are exactly the same as for Uranium Red Brown.

Sulphide Yellow Brown for Tinting. This tone is seen to advantage only when subsequently tinted, as when used without tinting it gives a very unpleasing brindle brown.

Use a normal print for this tone as it reduces by just about the correct amount for tinting.

A.	Potass. Ferricyanide	3 lbs.
	Potass. Bromide	1 lb.
	Water to	10 gals.
B.	Sodium Sulphide crystal	3 oz.
	Hypo crystal	8 oz.
	Water to	10 gals.

It is convenient to keep stock solutions of hypo and sodium sulphide (say 20%) and measure these out by volume as required. A trace of iron in the sodium sulphide is of no moment providing the stock solution is boiled and the precipitated iron sulphide allowed to settle before use.

The well washed positive is thoroughly bleached in A, washed for five minutes, and immersed in solution B until the film is thoroughly toned. This bath appears to "ripen" slightly with age so that a little old bath should be added when compounding fresh solution, or else a waste piece of film should be first of all toned in the new bath in order to secure the same effect.

The effect of temperature on the solution A is simply to hasten the bleaching. With bath B, on immersion of the bleached film two reactions occur:

(a) Solution of the silver bromide in hypo.

(b) Conversion of the silver bromide to silver sulphide.

Normally, good results are obtained at 70 degrees F. but owing to the increased solvent power of hypo for silver bromide at high temperature, while the effect of the sodium sulphide remains unchanged, the tone becomes warmer and the image less contrasty at a limit of 75 degrees F, beyond which it is inadvisable to go.

*Copyright, 1916, by the Chalmers Publishing Co.

Hence, if the tone is too cold and the film too opque, the temperature should be increased from 70 degrees F. to one or two degrees and vice versa.

Tone about five minutes and wash fifteen minutes.

The bleaching bath A will keep until exhausted. Ten gallons of bath B will tone about 2,000 feet of film, after which there is a tendency for a dichroic fog-like deposit to form on the surface of the film during toning owing to the hypo becoming saturated with silver bromide. As soon as this happens to the bath it should be renewed.

Green tones by Vanadium and Iron. Use a normal black and white positive for this formula.

Tone in the bath prepared as follows:

		Avoirdupois
A.	Oxalic acid	1 lb. 4 oz.
	Vanadium stock solution	40 oz.
	Water to	5 gals.
B.	Potass. ferricyanide	3 oz. 145 grains
	Water	20 gals.
C.	Ferric Alum	8 oz. 145 grains
	(Ferric Ammonium Sulphate)
	Potass. Bichromate	72 grains
	Oxalic acid	7 oz.
	Potass. ferricyanide	3 oz. 145 grains
	Water	15 gals.

Dissolve each of the chemicals separately and mix the solutions obtained strictly in the order given.

D.	Ammonium Alum	2 lb. 1 oz. 110 grains
	Hydrochloric acid 10%	13½ oz.
	Water to	10 gals.
	Total volume	50 gals.

Add B to A with stirring; then add C, and finally add D to the mixture. The solution is then ready for use

The syrupy variety of Vanadium Chloride sold by Merck is recommended although its nature appears to vary with different batches, certain samples being very different to incorporate with the toning bath without giving rise to precipitation.

Vanadium Stock Solution.

	Avoirdupois.
Vanadium chloride (syrup)	3½ fl. oz.
Oxalic acid	3 oz 200 gr.
Water to	½ gal.

Any sludge which may have deposited from the vanadium chloride should be included also and the whole heated in a glass or enamelled vessel until a clear blue solution is obtained

The method of mixing the various solutions A, B, C, and D is of the greatest importance They should be mixed only in the concentrations recommended and strictly in the order given. Unless this is done, the vanadium will precipitate out as a green sludge.

Variation of temperature around 70 degrees F has little or no effect.

Tone ten to fifteen minutes and wash for the same length of time. Washing should be thorough as it is only during washing that the rich green tone develops.

Ten gallons of solution will tone about 1,400 feet of film without any appreciable deterioration of tone and if at this point and after each 1,000 feet, the bath is revived by the addition of hydrochloric acid equivalent to the amount originally employed: i. e

2 2-3 ozs 10% Hydrochloric Acid per 10 gals

3,000 feet may be toned. As the bath becomes exhausted it may be found necessary to increase the time of toning to fifteen minutes. It is not permissible to add further amounts of vanadium chloride in order to revive the bath, as the vanadium would then be precipitated. The vanadium may be incorporated with the bath only at the time of mixing.

Used intermittently the life is approximately the same.

Greenish blue tone with Vanadium and Iron. Use normal black and white positive for this formula.

The formula employed and instructions are exactly the same as for Green tones by Vanadium and Iron, except that the proportion of vanadium chloride is as follows:

Vanadium Chloride Stock Solution.
Per 10 gal. of bath, 4 ozs.

and only half the amount of hydrochloric acid should be employed. It is not permissable to convert this bath to the preceding by the addition of further amounts of vanadium chloride, in which case the latter would be precipitated.

How to Make and Operate Moving Pictures.

A COMPLETE PRACTICAL GUIDE TO THE TAKING AND PROJECTING OF CINEMATOGRAPH PICTURES. Edited by Bernard Jones. 12 mo., Cloth, 224 pages. Eight half-tone plates and numerous Line Drawings in the Text. Price $1.00 net, by mail $1.12. Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York.

This book is distinctly one for the beginner in motion pictures and contains little of value for the advanced worker.

There are nearly one hundred and fifty explanatory diagrams and illustrations and the text is brief and to the point.

Any one interested in learning anything about motion picture photography from a beginner or amateurs standpoint would do well to obtain a copy of this book.

The Photographer's Cyclopedia.

THE BRITISH JOURNAL PHOTOGRAPHIC ALMANAC FOR 1916.—Geo. Murphy, Agent for United States, New York City. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents; postage extra, according to zone rates.

As might naturally be expected, the BRITISH JOURNAL ALMANAC for this year has been delayed somewhat in publication, but despite the war, the editor has presented a volume of much interest and importance to photographic readers. The contents are varied, as usual, and the subjects treated of a practical worth to the profession.

What is of special interest is the energy displayed by manufacturers in Great Britain in meeting the requirements of workers whose resources had been so suddenly crippled by the disturbance in commercial relations. Thrown back almost exclusively upon their own capabilities, they have practically overcome the embarrassment by home supply or by substitution. The advertising pages, therefore, are of particular interest, as indicative of the manufacturers' independence of foreign supplies.

While this volume is primarily intended for the still picture photographer, it should find a place in the library of every motion picture photographer, as it is not only a reference as to where to obtain almost anything photographic under the sun, but also contains hundreds of formulas, many of which are used by the motion picture photographer in his daily work.

The absence of many of the usual advertisements of foreign makers has considerably reduced the size of the volume this year, but the amount of reading matter is the same, and the articles just as interesting and valuable as ever, and American as well as British makers of things photographic have contributed nobly in spite of the fearful draw-back of war conditions.

A Pyro Developer.

In view of the expense of the regular hydroquinone title developer, the following pyro developer will give a density equal to the regular hydroquinone-caustic title developer if used for a little longer time, a preferred time and temperature being 5 minutes at 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

The following is the formula:

		Avoirdupois.
1.	Sodium sulphite, anhydrous	6 lbs.
2.	Pyro	13 ozs.
3.	Carbonate Soda, anhydrous	2 lbs.
4	Caustic Soda, pure	3 ozs.
5.	Potassium bromide	6 ozs.
	Water	10 gallons

Dissolve the sulphite in some water, then add the other ingredients in order given If it is required to keep the developer a long time it may be desirable to make up and keep the soda as a separate solution, or better still make up a concentrated stock solution with less water and keep the stock solution in a large bottle with a glass siphon for removing the developer, protecting the solution from oxidation, by pouring a layer of heavy cylinder oil about a quarter of an inch thick over the top of the solution, where it will flow in a heavy viscous sheet on top of the solution, protecting it effectually from the atmosphere.

A short piece of rubber tubing drawn over the end of the glass siphon and constricted with an ordinary spring clothes-pin, provides a good air tight stopper which may be opened by pinching the clothes-pin. When wanted for use, dilute with the requisite amount of water and use immediately. As pyro developer oxidizes so rapidly, this formula is only recommended for use with the drum system of development, where the small amount of developer used for each fresh drum may be thrown away and a fresh batch used for each new drum.

AUTHORS FILM CO. GETS "ALSACE."

The exclusive rights of "Alsace," featuring Mme. Rejane, have been acquired by the Authors Film Co., Inc., 1432 Broadway, New York

This picture has been referred to lately as an all-round masterpiece in point of production, dramatic intensity and superb acting. The major burden is carried by Mme. Rejane herself, and as might be expected of so consummate an artist, Mme. Rejane portrays perfectly the stellar role.

In scheduling trade shows in the principal cities of the United States and Canada, the Authors Film Co., Inc., intends that state-right buyers and exhibitors shall have every opportunity of judging for themselves what effect "Alsace" will have on their box-office receipts.

"MANGER TO CROSS" LENTEN ATTRACTION.

"From the Manger to the Cross," the perennial offering, is coming up to its usual record for strong Lenten bookings this year, though no special efforts in the way of advertising and other solicitation have been made in its behalf. The Kalem feature made on the famous trip around the world is being booked direct from that company. With a complete line of artistic posters and four-page couriers that contain the endorsements of clergymen of all denominations the production answers the troublesome Lenten problem for many exhibitors.

LUCILLE TAFT IN "THE QUALITY OF FAITH."

Lucille Taft will be seen in a vampire role in the forthcoming Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "The Quality of Faith." As a society girl she relinquishes her claim to her minister fiance and later marries a society chap of whom she soon tires.

Alexander Gaden, Gertrude Robinson, Charles A. Travis, John Reinhard, Henry Pemberton, Alan Robinson and John Mackin are in the cast. Richard Garrick is the director.

Music for the Picture

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Musical Setting for "Civilization's Child."

Released April 23d by the Triangle Film Corporation.

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg by special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of Triangle films the following suggestions were prepared by the photoplay department of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or by a described action (marked D).

Old Peter Saramoff in the city of Kiev, Russia, decides that his grand-niece, Berna, should be brought to the city, but barely has the girl arrived when a massacre of Jews takes place. Berna, however, reaches America in safety and arrives at the home of Jacob Weil, her uncle, who is under the power of "Boss" McManus. The latter casts his sensuous eye upon her, ruins her and then throws her into the street. She later meets Turgenev, a young Russian violinist, who marries her. Later Turgenev, playing in a restaurant meets Ellen, daughter of McManus, who has now become district judge. Turgenev, desiring to marry Ellen, secures false evidence to obtain a divorce. Berna, recognizing the judge as her seducer, creates a scene in court and is sentenced to imprisonment. Six months later she is released and seeks her child. For revenge she tracks McManus to his home and kills him.

The character of this picture is intensely dramatic. Berna, when brought to Kiev, is a witness of the terrible massacre in which her uncle and aunt are killed. During this Black Night she hears the horrible tolling of the bell which is the signal for the carnival of murder. Afterwards in America whenever she hears bells tolling, disaster seems to follow her. There are through the whole of this picture direct cues of the tolling bells. Care should be taken to reproduce the sounds. If no large bell is available a tympani stick used on a gong would be effective. Note particularly: 38¼, 39½ and 47½, where there are violin solos which should be carefully followed.

Two Themes have been selected for this picture:

Theme A—"Prelude"—Rachmananoff, and Theme B—"Canzonetta"—d'Ambrosio.

Time of projection: five reels (about 5,000 feet), 75 minutes.

The Horrible Murder of Kamennoi-Ostrow.

Reported by S. M. Berg.

A horrible and ghastly murder was committed in a Bronx theater playing vaudeville and motion pictures by an orchestra consisting of a piano, bass, flute, cornet, trombone, drums and violin director, and the poor innocent victim was Anton Grigorowitsch Rubinstein's beautiful composition "Kamennoi-Ostrow" (Cloister Scene). This soul-revolting crime occurred during the presentation of a five-reel picture and it was performed (save the mark) as part of the musical interpretation of this film.

The tempo marked for Kamennoi-Ostrow is andante—69 alla breve, and in its second movement it becomes un poco mosso reverting later to tempo one and closing piu mosso. It was originally a pianoforte composition, but owing to its popularity several arrangers have prepared excellent orchestrations of this work. Much of its success in performance depends upon the pianist, as there are cadenzas and arpeggios which demand technical capabilities.

On this particular evening the writer entered the theater about 7.20 just as the second reel of the feature was being projected. The pianist was tinkering with one hand, turning music with the other and carrying on an animated conversation with someone over the orchestra rail. At 7.30 the members of the orchestra appeared. The violinist tuned up and attempted an abbreviated scale, in an endeavor possibly to warm up his hands. The bass player added to the discord, likewise the flute and drum, though the players of the cornet and trombone were satisfied to blow in their instruments without any perceptible sounds. A few moments silence and then came the opening bars of Kamennoi-Ostrow. Instead of andante the tempo was adagio religioso and the second movement wherein the cadenzas for the piano appear was the most distressing performance that could ever be imagined.

The piano would start, fail in an attempt and when the violinist in a noble effort to help him out reached the upper registers, the flute would suddenly discover that he had some cue notes and would "butt in" gloriously. At the closing cadenza the violinist turned his light out and took a well-needed rest, leaving the piano to continue alone. I can assure my readers that during this orchestral intermission of about three or four minutes he used the entire time in rehearsing the cadenzas of Kamennoi-Ostow for his own benefit irrespective of what was on the screen or what was needed to interpret the scenes. This is no concoction of imagination but an absolutely truthful incident, and it is no uncommon experience in this class of theaters.

This particular house is one of a chain controlled by a head office that has a musical director responsible for all the theater's musicians and their doings. In an interview with this gentleman some months ago and recounting to him a similar occurrence in another of their luxurious houses, the answer given was: "We have to put up with what music we can get for the picture so long as the vaudeville is 'gotten over.'"

The purpose of this article is not so much to draw attention to the incompetence of musicians in rendering such a piece of music but to the companies having meritorious features who rent their goods to such houses. Owing to their size, often seating from two to three thousand people, they are able to pay a price which means practically a first run in their neighborhood, and when such a musical interpretation is presented, instead of appreciating the merits of the film, the patrons' enjoyment is turned to displeasure and to their friends they adversely criticise it so that when billed to be played a few days later in a legitimate picture house it has already received a bad recommendation among its would-be patrons It is one thing for a releasing company to seek business but the day is here when they should be assured that their picture is going to be fittingly exhibited.

On a Sunday evening a few weeks ago I visited a picture house that charged 15 cents admission, presenting a five-reel feature and five reels of mixed program, accompanied by a large organ and an orchestra of eight pieces. The house was filled and at least three or four hundred people were standing waiting for seats. In order to cope with this situation and claim all the money possible the manager instructed his operator to run at top speed, which meant possibly nine minutes to a thousand feet The character of the picture was intensely pathetic, but when projected at such a speed it became a farce comedy, with the result that the whole audience was continually in an uproar of laughter. When these patrons reached their homes after such a performance their criticisms could be nothing but detrimental to the film.

The most successful picture of 1915, and I believe the biggest money maker, was "The Birth of a Nation." On all sides it is agreed that the picture itself is a masterly production, but how much of its success in presentation to the public was due to its musical interpretation?

Leading companies are today insisting that their exhibitors raise their prices of admission and that longer runs be secured so as to retain the status and quality of their goods. With this thought must be embodied the importance of fitting musical interpretation for the film. Consistent education of the exhibitor is today part of the service of leading manufacturers. They tell them what to advertise, how to advertise and what they should spend in advertising all in order to get the patrons to the theater. They then sit back and think their task finished, but this really is only the commencement of their efforts. If when the audience is seated in the theater the presentation of the film is made ridiculous or distressing by unsuitable music, or if appropriate music is murdered in its performance, discredit will reflect not only on the theater but on the picture and brand of release.

Possibly the death of Kamennoi-Ostow will go down in history as the story of one more martyr that has nobly given up its life for the great cause—fitting musical interpretation for the film.

"JUNGLE" FILMS ARE AMUSING.

The E. & R. Jungle Film Company last week showed five of its amusing single-reel subjects featuring Lillian Brown Leighton and also Napoleon and Sally, the two remarkable Simian actors. The pictures shown were "Haunted," "The Jungle Cure," "Some Detective," "What D'Ye Think o' That?" and "Uncle's Little Ones." The pictures are so made that they are without offense, and the fun will not be restricted to the little ones, but will extend to grown-ups. The chimpanzees are seen garbed in a complete outfit, and wear their togs with ease and naturalness. The animals get into all sorts of scrapes, but their good humor remains undisturbed. Each story is independent of the others.

"WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN?" AT GLOBE.

Before an invited audience, including many men and women prominent in the religious and social life of New York, "Where Are My Children?" was given its first public showing at the Globe theater on the morning of April 12. Those present were handed cards requesting an expression of opinion on the Smalleys' production, dealing with the subject of birth control from various angles. Almost without exception the comments were laudatory, showing a sentiment in favor of displaying the picture before audiences composed of adults. Supported by the endorsement of men such as Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, the Universal Company installed "Where Are My Children?" at the Globe theater on April 15 for an indefinite run. Presentations of Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," were concluded on the preceding evening.

Many Changes in Kleine Organization

Managers and Salesmen Shifted and Promoted—Several New Offices Opened.

PREPARATIONS for the handling of the big Billie Burke serial were responsible for a number of important changes in George Kleine's marketing organization last week. W. C. Condell, formerly a traveling salesman out of the Kansas City office, was promoted to the management of the Dallas, Tex., office, vice E. J. Moskowitz.

A. C. Melvin, for some time past road man out of Philadelphia, goes to Kansas City as manager. W. O. Edmunds, formerly handling George Kleine's Kansas City office, has been promoted to coast supervisor and will spend his time between the three Kleine offices at Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

J. C. Ragland, one of the most successful travellers out of the Kleine Pittsburgh office, goes to New Orleans where he will have charge, succeeding Howard Gale.

Among the several new offices soon to be opened that at Omaha will be handled by R. P. Peebles of the clerical forces of George Kleine's New York headquarters, who left for his new home. A new Kleine office will be opened in Detroit next week with Frank Rutledge of the Kleine Chicago office in charge. Mr. Rutledge is one of the best known film salesmen in the middle west. He has travelled through the State of Michigan for the Kleine interests for a long time, and is well known to exhibitors everywhere throughout that state.

The opening of the new offices at Omaha and Detroit will be made under the direct supervision of General Branch Manager Merle E. Smith who will also visit the Dallas, Tex., and possibly other offices before his return to New York headquarters.

A World Film Exposition

Will Show Three Brady-Made Productions Simultaneously in Twenty-four Branches.

WORLD Film Corporation is to hold a nation-wide exhibition day on Monday, April 24, under the auspices of the various branches throughout the United States, at which time the three first "Brady-Made" pictures will be shown to the trade at a central point to which the exhibitors are invited and to which their expenses will be pair provided they are amply impressed by the display of the three first "Brady-Made" pictures to enter into an agreement or contract with the World Film Corporation.

The three first pictures made under the direct supervision of Mr. Brady and to which he devoted his time and attention from the writing of the scenario to the completing of the assembling, are "The Closed Road," with House Peters, produced by Maurice Tourneur; "The Feast of Life," with Clara Kimball Young, produced by Albert Capellani, and "Her Maternal Right" with Kitty Gordon, produced by Robert Thornby.

These three pictures, the first of the "Best We Can Make" policy, as instituted by Mr. Brady, since he became directing head of the World Film Corporation, will be shown in theaters engaged for the purpose, beginning at 9 o'clock on the morning of April 24, and continuing until midnight. No matter from what point the exhibitors travel in order to witness the display if they are sufficiently interested and believe as firmly in World Film products as does Mr. Brady, their expenses will be paid by the film concern and he will be given an insight into the future intentions of the World Film Corporation.

Mr. Brady is writing a personal letter to every exhibitor in the United States, which will reach them previous to the display day, in which he states that he knows that every exhibitor is from Missouri and in which he requests that they attend this display whether they contemplate contracting for World products or not, in order that they can see the beginning of a new era and the first of the "Brady-Made" products.

The display will be controlled throughout the country by the twenty-four branches of the World Film Corporation with the branch managers in personal charge of each display.

VIVIAN MARTIN TO STAR IN MOROSCO AND PALLAS SUBJECTS.

Vivian Martin, the well known star of the screen and stage, has just signed to appear under the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures brands and will leave New York for the Los Angeles studios of the company on May 4. She will begin work on her initial production for the Paramount Program immediately.

Donald Crisp, Producer

The Director of "Ramona" Is an Unusual Combination of the Poetic and the Athletic.

STANDING at the head of the main aisle at Levy's, in Los Angeles, one evening last June, awaiting the result of a search for seats by genial Maitre d'Hotel Harris, a World man was greeted by Donald Crisp. In answer to the query as to what knowledge he might have as to what was new, the director leaned over and remarked: "Well, in case it interests you, I don't mind saying I am going to make a picture for W. H. Clune." It did interest the World man, and he asked Mr. Crisp to slip him a photograph.

Donald Crisp.

That photograph was eight months in reaching New York. Mr. Crisp brought it himself when with the Clune party he came to the metropolis to stage "Ramona" for its New York showing. The production speaks for itself as to what the director had accomplished in the intervening weeks. It has aroused interest in the man responsible for the technical excellencies in the staging of the subject.

Donald Crisp is not an accident. For a goodly number of years he has been training for the swinging of a big job. He was educated at Eton—he was born in London—and while there specialized in literature and athletics. He was on the football team and was also a cross country runner. In the Boer war he was wounded at Tugela Heights, at Kimberly and at Ladysmith.

In New York, Mr. Crisp sang at a benefit. On the strength of that effort John C. Fisher engaged him for "Floradora," and during the following year he sang also in "The Silver Slipper" and "San Toy." Under George M. Cohan he played the Earl in "The Yankee Prince," and the lead in "The Little Millionaire." It was during this engagement that his bent for rhyming found play; he composed lyrics that made deserved hits.

With the Biograph company Mr. Crisp did notable work. Going to the Reliance-Majestic he was featured in parts that gained him popularity as a player. There was, for instance, his Bull McGee in "The Escape." He had important roles, too, in "Home, Sweet Home," "His Secret," and "By Man's Law." There was a short engagement with the Famous Players in the Pickford Company. It was after this, and while Mr. Crisp was on the eve of departure for a five weeks' hunting trip prior to coming east to take up important work, that Mr. Clune's proposition appealed to him. The California film man had seen Mr. Crisp in action during the making of "The Birth of a Nation," and knew the capacity of the director.

The judgment of Mr. Clune in the selection of a director has been justified in high degree by the results. The many offers that have come to Mr. Crisp in the last few weeks are likewise proof that his work is recognized by other manufacturers. "Ramona" was not made under ordinary circumstances. It was created in spite of unusual handicaps into the many details of which it is not necessary here to enter. He did have, however, the hearty co-operation of Mr. Clune and of Lloyd Brown, the general manager of the company. Properties that were known to be in the market in quantity suddenly vanished. As an illustration, when it became necessary to secure a yoke of oxen none could be obtained nearer than Santa Barbara. It was the American company that loaned them. A motor truck left Los Angeles at 6 o'clock at night, and in the morning at 10 o'clock the animals were on the location. When snow suddenly came to Southern California search everywhere for a farm wagon was futile until the Universal company agreed to loan one, and it was yanked to the location behind an automobile.

"Ramona" is a tribute to the professional instinct of its director. While the picture portrays the story of the book, it is in the interpretation—in the artistry, in the poetry, the imagery, and in the superb acting of players, who advance to the star class almost over night—that the subject stands out. In the characters are seen the result of the director's close study of types.

Mr. Crisp is blessed with a cast iron frame and ability to withstand hard work. In Los Angeles he makes his home at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, one of the foremost in the country. It is here he keeps up his physical condition. That he has remarkable muscular development the writer knows of his own knowledge. He vividly recalls an afternoon last June when as the guest of Mr. Crisp he visited the big gymnasium. He saw the director toy with the great dumb-bells, with one arm putting over his head a weight of metal the average man would hardly lift from the floor with two. The writer, too, has heard that fine lyric tenor with which on occasion Mr. Crisp entertains his friends as in the past he has entertained audiences.

The director of "Ramona" has returned to Los Angeles to begin work on "The Eyes of the World." He goes back not a bigger man, but one whose capacity for superior work is more widely recognized and with the prestige of having entertained New Yorkers with a picture that is really worth while.

ANNA NILSSON IN PATHE'S "WHO'S GUILTY?"

ANNA NILSSON, co-starred with Tom Moore in "Who's Guilty?", the fourteen two-reel series of photo-novels which the Arrow Film Corporation is producing for release through the Pathe Exchanges, was born in Helsingfors, Sweden, just twenty-four years ago. She has been on the stage and in motion pictures in the United States for the last nine years; yet she does not come of theatrical folks. In fact, Miss Nilsson is the first member of her family to go on the stage.

It is largely an accident—though a very lucky accident—that Miss Nilsson is today one of the real screen stars of America. Back in Helsingfors, Miss Nilsson, as a little girl, knew several families who in time emigrated to the United States. They fired the imagination of Anna Nilsson with their tales of the land across the sea. Later she made the voyage and saw in New York City the place where her youthful ambitions would be justified. Eventually she met one of the leading fashion photographers of the metropolis, who was convinced that in Anna Nilsson, then but fifteen years old, was a charming subject for the camera. Also, she could, to use the vernacular, "wear clothes." In a brief time Miss Nilsson had become the highest-salaried fashion model in New York.

One day she dropped into the studios of the Kalem Company to visit Alice Joyce. While she was sitting in Miss Joyce's dressing room a director entered and—well, then and there Miss Nilsson became booked for a theatrical career. For four and a half years Miss Nilsson remained with the Kalem Company, appearing in more than 250 pictures in that time. In the feature presentation of "Shenandoah," Miss Nilsson was starred for the first time; also, her work in that picture established her as one of America's premier screen actresses. Upon leaving the Kalem Company, Anna Nilsson went to the Fox Company, where she played the lead in "Regeneration." With Kleine she was featured in "The Scarlet Road." Playing then opposite Robert Warwick she appeared in "To Him That Hath," one of the big dramatic roles of her career.

ALICE BRADY IN "LA BOHEME."

Alice Brady is now well along in the production of the famous Puccini classic, "La Boheme."

The role of Mimi is admirably fitted to Miss Brady. It is her favorite opera and in order to better get the inspiration and the motif, a Vocalian has been installed at the Peerless studio and the scenes, as they are played by Miss Brady, are rendered on the Vocalian; thus the original Puccini music aids the action as visualized from Merger's story and lyrics.

Albert Capellani is in charge of the directorial end of the "La Boheme" production and the interiors are being made at the Fort Lee studio, where the entire floor is taken up with some of the massive sets.

The picture will be one of the first of the entirely "Brady-Made" pictures, and will be released June 26 on the World Program.

Industry Must Right Itself

Felix Feist After Tour of Observation and Investigation Gives Meaty Interview to Moving Picture World.

By W. Stephen Bush.

I SAW him a few hours after his return from an extended trip, devoted altogether to observation and investigation. For some weeks he had camped on the trail of the exhibitor. He had not merely skimmed over the surface and confined himself to the exhibitor on the main thoroughfares. No, he traveled out into the country and set up his conning tower in villages and hamlets. It is Felix Feist I am speaking of. Just now he is the general sales agent of the re-organized World Film Company. His observations make interesting and instructive reading, but they gain in importance from his added conclusion that his company will translate his ideas and suggestions into action at a very early date. Mr. Feist had been in Boston, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Omaha, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Dallas, Memphis, New Orleans and Atlanta. He had likewise been in scores of smaller places.

Getting to the Bottom of Things.

"I have looked at things from the exhibitor's angle," he said. "I went out to find out how wrong we were so as to make it right. You cannot apply the remedy without knowing the nature of the ailment. I found some things in which the exhibitor is at fault. The one thing which makes it unprofitable to the manufacturer and harder for the exhibitor to make money is overproduction. Let me give you this illustration: Say there is a medium-sized town with two exhibitors. These exhibitors show features only twice a week which permits them to make a fuss over them. The public are glad to come because they know they are going to see big productions on those nights; both exhibitors make money and both are able to pay a good price to the manufacturer. Now they get five or seven features for the same price which they paid before for one feature. Result: There remains but one feature: 'The Birth of a Nation.'

Program Features.

"Manufacturers are to blame for this. Those that made features let us assume were making money. Now the manufacturers who were giving regular service—the program people—thought they had to make features to protect their programs. Instead of protecting their programs they were forcing them out. They got no money for their features and the exhibitor no longer had anything to make a fuss about. There's enough material here for a volume. One of the great faults or troubles I found prevalent among exhibitors was the number of reels they offered to their public as a magnet. In the main here's the reason for their giving so many reels. They want to keep the public in their theatres long enough to kill the possibility of it patronizing their competitors, overlooking the fact entirely that they were killing their own patronage.

"The exhibitors complain about exchanges not giving them proper service. Now, there are two sides to this. In some parts of the country it is necessary to relay your film. Smith, when he gets through with his reels, is supposed to send them on to Jones. Too often Smith forgets and upsets the best-laid plans of the exchange which is honestly trying to give the best service. There is a lack of co-operation between and among exhibitors themselves. Then there is often an utter disregard of the obligation to send advertising matter and cuts and photos back to the exchange after the exhibitor is through with them. Sometimes the fault lies with the exchange. Not far from Dallas, Tex., there is an exhibitor to whom his exchange sent the same reels three times in succession. The third time the exhibitor kept the reels so he would not get them a fourth time. In this way he insured himself against another repeater and saved a little expressage. I don't have to tell you that this exchange is on the down-grade, not because its pictures are bad but simply because its service is inefficient. After such an experience it is natural enough for the exhibitor to get suspicious and to mistrust every exchange; as a result a lot of telephone and telegraph bills are incurred out of all proportion to actual needs, all of which must be attributed to bad service.

Too Much Time Spent in the Box Office.

"I found that the surest place to discover the exhibitor was in the box office. He does not spend time enough in his theater. It is all wrong to advertise ten reels for a dime and not care what is on the reels. As a result of this lack of attention on the part of the manager, many pictures, better known as 'junk,' are shown. My contention is that if much of this old film were thrown into the garbage can and taken as absolute loss, such loss would be more than made up by the better prices the producer would get for his new and improved product. The old junk now on the market helps to kill the possibilities of making good features.

"The exhibitor who thinks he has to run features should make sure that the picture he advertises as a feature contains that something which makes a feature different from five reels of film. If he runs a real feature but once a month he will be better off than if he runs old junk.

"The policy of getting bookings at any price regardless of consequences hurts the motion picture business. The idea that 'people will come anyway' is wholly fallacious. We may have millions coming every day, but we have more to get in the future. We are just starting to get the best elements in every community—men and women who rebel at seeing junk. Poor films will drive these elements away. No exhibitor knows when these people may visit his theatre, so he should always be ready for them, no matter when they come.

Exhibitors Against Salacious Pictures and Posters.

"One thing has become pretty firmly fixed in my mind: The exhibitor does not want either salacious posters or salacious pictures. Exhibitors are keener than ever for cleanliness on the screen.

"I have gleaned my information not merely from the houses on the main thoroughfares of the big centers, but I have gone out into the suburbs and the country towns and I have made it a point to talk to the small-town exhibitor whenever I found him in the exchanges. Some of them are satisfied with very moderate success; others strive to improve conditions. The latter will have larger and better houses and will keep away undesirable competition.

Boom Days Ahead.

"I say to you that the greatest fortunes to be taken out of the industry are those that will be taken out in the next five years. The only way to get these fortunes will be by hard, conscientious work and sheer ability. Also, exhibitors and manufactures must help each other. As far as this organization of ours is concerned we will co-operate in every possible way with the exhibitor who is anxious to improve his show and to give our pictures the best presentation."

HAND GOES UP ANOTHER STEP.

Stanley W. Hand, well known to New England exhibitors, has been appointed assistant sales manager of the World Film Corporation and is hard at work at the executive offices, 130 West 46th street, New York.

Mr. Hand came to Boston a year ago as a salesman for the World Film Corporation and was known as "Billy Sunday" Hand, amongst the exhibitors, because of his frank and "on the level" dealings. He succeeded P. B. Elliott as manager of the Boston branch in June, 1915, and became one of the film colony at Marblehead, Mass.

In November he was transferred to the New York exchange and on April 3 appointed to his new position as assistant to Felix Feist.

MABEL NORMAND LEAVES FOR CULVER CITY.

Mabel Normand, "The Keystone Girl," left New York last week for California after her two appearances with Roscoe Arbuckle in the eastern made Triangle farces, "He Did and He Didn't," and "The Bright Lights." The last coupon on about three yards of ticket read: "Good for One Passage from Los Angeles to Culver City." This is significant in that it shows that Miss Normand is really to achieve her ambition and appear as a star in light comedy dramas. Teddy Sampson, wife of Ford Sterling, went with her, probably to rejoin the Griffith players. She last appeared with Helen Ware in the Fine Arts feature, "Cross Currents." Complete details regarding her first appearance in her new sphere will be forthcoming as soon as she and Thomas H. Ince have had a few conferences.

"SOULS AFLAME" BY METRO.

At the Metro offices it has been definitely decided to call the big five-part feature production in which Dorothy Green and Clifford Bruce are starred, and which was recently completed at the Popular Plays and Players studio, "Souls Aflame."

"Souls Aflame" is a strong, vital story of today. One of the features is the introduction of a submarine in a stirring scene. "Souls Aflame" serves to introduce both Miss Green and Mr. Bruce to Metro audiences, as it will be the first time that either has appeared upon the Metro program.

Vitagraphs Coming

"The Law Decides," "Mr. Jack Goes Into Business," "The Rookie," "Terry's Tea Party" and "The Man Hunt" for Week of April 24.

"THE LAW DECIDES," is the title of the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature to be released on April 24. This story, told in seven parts, was written by Marguerite Bertsch, and directed by William P. S. Earle with the assistance of Miss Bertsch. Harry Morey and Dorothy Kelly, in the leading parts, do great work, and are ably supported by Donald Hall, Bobby Connelly, Adele Kelly and Louise Beaudet.

The latest of the "Escapades of Mr. Jack" with Frank Daniels, is "Mr. Jack Goes Into Business." This is a one-part comedy, written by Brunno Lessing and directed by C. Jay Williams. It is scheduled for release on April 24.

"The Rookie" is a single-part drama produced by Harry Davenport and is also listed for April 24. The story comes from the pen of Paul West. Evart Overton, as the Rookie, is assisted by Bobby Connelly and Ned Finley.

"Terry's Tea Party," a one-part comedy written by George McManus, the famous newspaper cartoonist, tells of the trouble father has in getting out to his "cronies" in the corner saloon. The cast includes John T. Kelly, Hughey Mack, Kate Price, Jewell Hunt and Doc Donohue. Lawrence Semon, who directed the production, also plays an important part. It will be released on April 28.

"The Man Hunt" is a three-part Broadway Star Feature drama. James Morrison in the leading role is seen to good advantage. The balance of the cast includes Robert Gaillard, Billie Billings, Marguerite Blake, Emmanuel A.

Scene from "Terry's Tea Party" (Vitagraph).

Turner and Raymond Walburn. Arthur C. Train is the author of the story and Paul Scardon is responsible for its direction. It is on the General Film program for April 29.

ATWELL GOES TO RIALTO.

Ben H. Atwell has resigned as director of publicity of the Knickerbocker theater to assume a similar position with the new Rialto theater. Wallace M. Powers, also a former newspaper man, who was Mr. Atwell's predecessor at the Knickerbocker theater, and who has since been associated with the national campaign conducted by the Triangle Film Corporation, will return to his old position.

"Carmen" Burlesque will Run

Spoor Says He Was Not Satisfied with Two-Reel Picture, So Made It Four—No Danger from Chaplin.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, has issued a statement in reply to the threat of Charles Chaplin that he would enjoin the showing of the "Burlesque on Carmen" in four reels.

This is one of the last two photoplays produced by Chaplin for Essanay, the other, "Police," not yet having been released. It seems that there were originally 16 000 feet of negative taken in "Carmen," that Chaplin trimmed it to two reels, that the Essanay company was dissatisfied with it as it stood, took it apart and recut it in four reels. Then came Mr. Chaplin and said he would stop its appearance.

Mr. Spoor said in regard to the rumor:

"No matter what Mr. Chaplin says, his contract with Essanay is in no way violated. Mr. Chaplin's O. K. was not necessary. We have paid Chaplin for 16,000 feet of negative made taking 'Carmen,' and our contract gives us the right to use any or part of anything he made for us under that contract.

"I will say to exhibitors, if Chaplin sees fit to restrain, he is at liberty to do so, but I wish to remind them that they take no chances in booking 'Carmen,' as the bond necessary for Chaplin to furnish will be ample to protect them."

Charlie Chaplin's burlesque on "Carmen" has its initial showing at the Broadway theater, Forty-first street and Broadway, New York City, and took the spectators by storm. Police reserves were called out to hold the crowds in check, so great were the throngs about the doors of the theater trying to gain entrance.

Joseph Kaufman a Famous Players Director

A VALUABLE addition has been made to the producing staff of the Famous Players Film Company in the person of Joseph Kaufman, who has severed his connection with the Lubin Company, for which he has been directing three, four and five-reel productions for the last three years. His last film made under the banner of the Philadelphia concern was "Dollars and the Woman."

Joseph Kaufman.

Mr. Kaufman's first production for the Famous Players will be an adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's celebrated story, "The Great Gamble," in which Pauline Frederick is to be starred. Robert G. Vignola, who has presided over Miss Frederick's last three film appearances for the Paramount Program—"The Spider," "Audrey," and "The Moment Before"—is to direct the film debut of a celebrated Broadway star who is soon to make her first appearance on the screen in a Famous Players production.

Through Mr. Kaufman's connection with the Famous Players, he will again come in official contact with Hugh Ford, as the former appeared on the stage under the direction of Mr. Ford over ten years ago. A native of Washington and a graduate of Georgetown University, Mr. Kaufman first appeared on the stage in a big stock company in the Capital City, and then played in stock in Denver, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Detroit, and New York City successively.

Mr. Kaufman spent seven years in association with Charles Frohman, during which time he was stage manager for Maude Adams, William Collier, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Virginia Harned, and acted as Marie Doro's first stage manager.

Triangle Plays for Rialto Opening

Rothapfel Announces That Douglas Fairbanks and Roscoe Arbuckle Will Dedicate New Playhouse.

TWO Triangle stars have been chosen by S. L. Rothapfel to dedicate his ultra-modern motion picture playhouse, the Rialto, which will have its long heralded opening on Friday, April 21. The honor which he thus accords tothe Griffith-Ince-Sennett standard of production has an added significance in Rothapfel's recognition of the position attained in six months of film work by Douglas Fairbanks, former light comedian of the legitimate stage. It was Fairbanks who made the big hit at the Knickerbocker theater opening last September, when Triangle plays were first revealed to the theater-going public.

Scene from "The Other Man" (Keystone).

"The Good Bad-Man" is the fifth picture Fairbanks has done for Triangle at the Fine Arts studios, and has the further interest of having been based on a scenario of his own. Taking as his leading character the western bad man, he departs from the William S. Hart interpretation and presents a sparkling figure in a broadly humorous atmosphere. There is plenty of gripping drama in the picture, however, and W. Christy Cabanne has overlooked no opportunities for spectacular effects. Bessie Love is the heroine and other parts are played by Mary Alden, Sam De Grasse, Pomeroy Cannon and Fred Burns.

Roscoe Arbuckle is straining every nerve at Fort Lee to finish "The Other Man," which Rothapfel announces as the comedy feature of his opening program. The bad weather of last week delayed the filming, but the director believes the comedy will be ready in time.

Roscoe plays two roles in the picture, appearing as a tramp and as the highly polished suitor for the hand of the rich girl. A masked ball provides many spectacular features and the big thrill is furnished at the cost of an automobile sent over a cliff. Irene Wallace, Minta Durfee, Al St. John, William Jefferson, Joe Bordeau and Alice Lake have prominent roles.

IVY CLOSE IN ENGLISH ARMY HOSPITAL.

Rumors that Ivy Close, the English favorite, might soon become a screen star, have brought attention to the fact that Miss Close is at present occupied at a Middlesex army hospital, where, with a number of other prominent English society women, she is aiding in the care of the wounded and convalescent Tommies. Owing to the fact that the Continent has been the scene of her greatest triumphs, Miss Close has been hit unusually hard by the world war. In the past few seasons Miss Close has been appearing almost constantly on the Continent with only occasional engagements in London. But the Paris season is no more, and following the close last fall of her successful London season the famous beauty has devoted her efforts to the hospital work.

Chaplin Breaks Theater Record

Police Reserves Called to Handle Crowd at the Broadway —Reports from Many Cities Indicate Capacity Houses.

THE tremendous popularity of Charlie Chaplin accounted for an unprecedented attendance at the Broadway theater, New York, last week, when he appeared in the Essanay Company's burlesque of "Carmen." At the opening performance on Sunday, April 9, the house was packed fifteen minutes after the opening of the doors, the lobby was filled by those awaiting admittance and lines leading to the box office extended for two blocks. Police reserves were called to handle the constantly increasing crowd.

Leon D. Langsfeld, manager of the Broadway, admitted that in all his experience he had never seen anything like the sensation caused by the Chaplin exhibition. His box office statement indicated 10,000 paid admissions on the first day of the run, and throughout the remainder of the week all previous records of the theater were surpassed. Mr. Langsfeld is ready to give the picture his emphatic endorsement as the most popular attraction ever offered an exhibitor. On April 16 Chaplin was moved to the Stanley theater, in the same neighborhood, for a seven-day showing, by no means exhausts the possibilities of a production of this description. In speaking of the attitude of his audiences Manager Langsfeld said that he never had seen all classes of patrons so thoroughly amused.

Reports from Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati and other important cities indicate that the Chaplin film is playing to capacity at every performance.

V-L-S-E'S First Birthday

General Manager Irwin Points to a Successful Year and Reviews the Policies Which Made Success Possible.

IF THERE ever existed in any quarter any doubt as to the reliability and responsibility of the exhibitors of this country and Canada, such doubt must be dispelled by the record of the V-L-S-E, which has just closed the first year of its business. This record, which is unquestionably the most phenomenal ever achieved in the film industry, shows that the bad accounts due the Big Four amount to less than one-fortieth of one per cent.

Walter W. Irwin.

This accomplishment assumes even added significance when viewed in the light that contrary to the practice prevalent among most distributing companies of insisting upon an iron-bound contract from the exhibitor, accompanied by a deposit covering service for a month or two in advance, the V-L-S-E requires no contracts or any deposits. It is most significant also, when it is considered that statisticians claim that there is at least a million dollars of exhibitors' accounts annually charged off in the film industry.

Discussing this interesting record, as well as other phases of the organization's achievements, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, on the occasion of the company's first anniversary, this week, said:

"The record of this organization in having upon its books at the close of a large volume of business for the first year less than one-fortieth of one per cent. in bad accounts is said to be unheard of in the film industry. The complaint, however, is not so much due to this organization as it is to the exhibitors, for the figures prove that the exhibiting end of the film business is composed of men of as great or greater degree of substantiality and integrity as can be found in any other commercial line of equal numbers.

"We, in turn, believe that we are doing our part by running our business on our own money, rather than on that of our exhibitors. Upon the inception of this company it was recognized that it was not only commercially unsound but absolutely unfair to acquire several hundreds of thousands of exhibitors' money by forced deposits on contracts, and then to use the money in producing the film which is sold them. Moreover, it was the judgment of this company that it was not necessary to acquire that money as a protection against exhibitors' accounts. It is, therefore, a pleasure to announce not only that the judgment of the company was correct, but that the greatest majority of exhibitors are business men of dependability far above the average—a fact that is conclusively proven by the books of this organization. Although the V-L-S-E does not ask the exhibitor to assist in financing its operations, it does give an exhibitor an all-potent voice in those operations. I refer to the open-booking policy by which an exhibitor can have what he wants, when he wants it, and for as long as he wants it—in other words, the system by which he is able always to choose a picture best suited to his neighborhood and his clientele, and to book it solely according to its merit, without being compelled to take several features of mediocre quality in order to secure one that he really wants and needs.

"In this company each manufacturer is in the keenest kind of competition, for he receives only the proceeds of his own product. Under no circumstances is the picture of one manufacturer tied to the picture of any other manufacturer. Therefore the weekly financial statement which each manufacturer receives is so strong an argument for endeavoring to make better and better pictures that no oratory or written word is ever necessary.

"But to make this policy of the utmost benefit, it is likewise necessary to see to it that every picture is sold according to its box office value—that is, according to its drawing power for the particular theater booking it. So, aside from the fact that the pictures of this company have been of consistently good quality, and that many of them have attained extraordinary merit, our progress has demonstrated also that the exhibitor appreciates paying in accordance with the quality—in accordance with the box office value of the feature he is booking.

"This policy of measuring our product solely on its merit has been applied to every branch of the Big Four's affairs. It has been its inexorable ruling in regard to all of its dealings, not only with the manufacturers and exhibitors, but with its employees as well. This has made for a permanent organization and has created a veritable avalanche of good will for the V-L-S-E.

"'I like to come to this exchange,' said an exhibitor, as he entered the New York branch, the other day, 'because you are always sure of doing business with the same man.'

"With between three and four hundred employees the fact stands out that there have been only three resignations in a year's time, and very few dismissals, for the home office has preferred to err on the side of retaining an employee than in that of dismissing him.

"Of the twenty-four offices conducted by this company, sixteen are managed by men advanced from the ranks of salesmen; six bookkeepers, who showed the desire to learn, have been advanced to the sales force. Ten shipping clerks have been promoted. The assistant general manager was first a branch manager, then a division manager, and then brought to the home office. So it is that every employee, from the office boy up, is ever striving to make himself and his company more efficient, because each realizes that he has a chance to go forward, since all promotions are based solely on merit. This means, of course, the total absence of any politics—the grading of every employee by what he accomplishes.

"Another policy which has had its influence in the growth of this company and in the calibre of its service to its exhibitors is the profit-sharing arrangement whereby everyone from the janitress up receives a substantial portion of the net profits of the company, as well as a salary, so that each is interested, not only in his own efficiency, but in the efficiency of everyone else.

"So much of success in an organization depends upon its spirit, and, to some extent, at least, it must have been the spirit of the V-L-S-E which enabled it to go through the summer of 1915, with an increase in business instead of a decrease. The greater the handicap—that is the greater the heat—the greater the sales force strove to produce results for the exhibitor and thereby for the V-L-S-E. So, as successful as the past year has been, it is confidently expected that the next year will be one of even greater progress.

"This expectation is based on two facts: The first is that the four manufacturers making up this company are working harmoniously with the V-L-S-E, and because of their competition, each with the others, they are bending every effort to produce greater and greater pictures. The second is that necessarily the first year, to some extent, has been devoted to developing and teaching, the work of which, of course, will not have to be duplicated in a permanent organization. On the contrary, it will be possible to give the time devoted to this preliminary work to increasing our individual and collective efficiency."

KOPFSTEIN DENIES PACEMAKER IS A SUBSIDIARY

"I want to deny most emphatically that the Pacemaker productions are in any way connected or allied with any other manufacturer of films," said Jacques Kopfstein, organizer of the Pacemaker Company. "The impression seems to prevail in film circles that this new organization is the offshoot of another concern in whose employ I had previously been and was created simply for the purpose of stifling competition. The Pacemaker is an absolutely independent enterprise which hopes to compete legitimately with the best feature manufacturers. I expect to be in a position to announce within a week what the Pacemaker policy will be, as well as a list of the co-operative exchanges that have entered into the plan."

Selig Releases for May

A Diamond Special Tom Mix Feature and a Hoyt Comedy on General Film Program.

PURSUING the consistent policy that the zest in shorter length film productions is none too good, the Selig Polyscope Company announces additional releases through General Film Company which will uphold the new standard of the Selig Company in every detail.

On Monday, May 1, "The Man Within," a Diamond Special in three reels featuring Tom Mix, will be released. The Selig Company pronounces this drama an unusual one. Tom Mix and Victoria Ford are given opportunities for some sensational riding and shooting. Best of all, the story or plot is not secondary. "An Elephant's Gratitude," will be released Saturday, May 6. An elephant enacts a most important role. Edith Johnson and Harry Lonsdale are starred.

Charles Hoyt's best comedy, "A Stranger in New York," will be released through General Film service by the Selig Polyscope Company on Monday, May 8. Otis Harlan, known as the King of American Comedians, will be seen in the role of "A Stranger." "A Stranger in New York," could well be released as a special feature. Mr. Harlan is supported by an all-star cast. "A Stranger in New York" was produced by T. N. Heffron whose Selig Red Seal plays, released through V-L-S-E, have scored such triumphs. There is logical comedy in every inch of this three-reel Diamond Special and the scenic effects are said to be extraordinary. On Saturday, May 13, "The Sheriff's Duty," a Tom Mix drama, will be a General Film service drawing card.

Five-Reel Knickerbocker Feature

Once a Month Beginning Week of May 15—Lois Meredith in "Spellbound," the First Release.

THE General Film Company announces the addition of a five-reel feature in the regular service, to be released once a month under the Knickerbocker Star Features brand. The first release, to be scheduled definitely for some date in the week of May 15, presents the beautiful and gifted Lois Meredith in "Spellbound," a sensational drama of modern society. Henry King, Jackie Saunders and other popular stars will follow, in five-reel dramas of the quality which has made the Knickerbocker Star Features famous. All productions will be under the direction of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

Lois Meredith.

The immediate success of any good five-reel feature in the regular service is apparent to every one familiar with the present needs of exhibitors. The Knickerbocker Star five-reel features will, it is declared, afford the exhibitor a monthly production in every respect equal to the best subjects obtainable outside of any program. This was made clear at a recent meeting attended by more than a dozen of the leading exchange managers, who were enthusiastic over the plan. An advance showing of "Spellbound" won high praise from all present.

Speaking of the quality of the productions already finished, H. M. Horkheimer said: "Nothing more plainly indicates the trend of the times than the public demand for features of exceptional quality. Against this demand the exhibitors must balance the quality of available productions and the tendency to place the cost of the few extraordinary features out of all proportion to the exhibitor's limitations. The five-reel Knickerbocker Star Features will go a long way toward solving this problem for the exhibitor. While no expense is being spared, the introduction of modern efficiency methods into our studios enables us to produce features of exceptional quality for release in the regular service. I am sure that everybody who sees Lois Meredith in 'Spellbound' will agree that no recent production of any character has surpassed this extraordinary picture in quality and scope of production, in strength and story, in artistic effects, or in the presentation of a singularly beautiful and gifted actress. That is to say nothing of the productions immediately following, with such popular stars as Henry King and Jackie Saunders. Mr. King is directing his own productions with exceptional ability and artistic strength; the other stars are working under the direction of able producers, supervised by my brother and myself. The stories are the best obtainable, the production lavish, the photography superfine. I predict a startling success for the five-reel Knickerbocker Star Features."

A special campaign has been planned for these productions. Artists are already at work preparing unusual posters, which will be issued in great variety to meet the requirements of all ranks of exhibitors. The campaign includes extensive advertising and newspaper publicity designed to promote direct results for the exhibitor. The popularity of Miss Meredith, Henry King, Jackie Saunders and other stars furnishes an opportunity for publicity of an unusual character.

A preliminary canvass of exhibitors throughout the country, conducted by Knickerbocker representatives acting in collaboration with exchange managers, indicates convincingly that the majority of exhibitors, including both exclusive feature houses and those using program service, acknowledge not only a desire, but an actual need of productions such as are promised by Knickerbocker.

Huntley Gordon

HUNTLEY GORDON, leading man at the Bay Shore studios of the Vitagraph Company, is one of the most favored motion picture actors of the country in the matter of looks and reputation and his association with the clever new star, Lucille Lee Stewart, makes a team that is sure to attract widespread attention.

He supported Ethel Barrymore in "Our Mrs. McChesney," has appeared under the management of William A. Brady, and before coming to the Vitagraph under the direction of Mr. Ince, was one of the ablest actors on Broadway.

Huntley Gordon.

Huntley Gordon was born in Canada and his earliest stage experience was in a Canadian stock company. He won considerable distinction in two photoplays, "Money of the Many" and "Miss Warren's Brother," having starred with two other large motion picture concerns before joining the Vitagraph.

This exceptional performer is well under thirty, loves outdoor sports and is already universally popular with the players at the Bay Shore studios.

WILL MAKE SPECIALTY OF NOVELS.

When the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation begins the production of its feature pictures in July, it will have a list of scenarios to draw upon what will include adaptations of many of the most successful novels ever written. Among the authors who will be represented are Robert W. Chambers, Gouveneur Morris, Hall Caine, Rex Beach, Charles Major, Edgar Allen Poe, Guy de Maupassant, Maurice Maeterlinck and David Graham Phillips.

UNIVERSALITES CONDUCT FILM MAGAZINE.

Frank M. Wiltermood, one of the well-known scenario staff writers at Universal City, and Jack Sacker, who has been an actor at the picture city for the past year, have taken over the management of the Photoplayers' Weekly, a popular Los Angeles film magazine. Wiltermood is to be the editor, while Sacker will be the business manager. They will continue in their work at Universal City and attend to their journalistic duties at night.

Paramount Program

Releases for the Week of May 1 Include More Novelties and Educational Subjects.

ROUNDING out the features on the Paramount program for the week of May 1, are three single reels which include the Pictograph films, headed by Henry Reuterdahl's picturized arguments on naval preparedness; "Visiting the Dog-Eaters of Benguot," Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture, and "Bobby Bumps and His Goatmobile," Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon by Earl Hurd.

In continuation of the campaign for national preparedness in the Pictographs for this week Henry Reuterdahl's arguments for proper naval equipment against a foreign enemy will be visualized on the screen. Reuterdahl is the greatest naval authority in this country and he has graphically demonstrated the inadequacy of America's sea defences. In another division of this reel the rules of etiquette will be translated into pictures. Further adventures of the hero, Happifat, will be shown in the Trickids and "How Submarines Go Down" in the series "Things We Should Know."

Puppy dogs, served a la carte, are luxuries on the menu at the dinner to which Burton Holmes takes his fellow travelers on the thirteenth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, "Visiting the Dog-Eaters of Benguet." The trip is made in Mr. Holmes' motor car up the Benguet Road, most wonderful mountain-climbing boulevard in the world, leading from the lowlands of Luzon, near Manila to the summer capitol at Baguio, where the audience sees a polo game, played by two teams of officials stationed at Baguio. The dog-eating Benguet Igorotes appear for the first time on any screen, and also the dog-market, where thin dogs are most sought after by the natives. Later the animals are fattened with rice, and stewed or roasted. Paramount audiences will also get a glimpse of the Bontoc Igorotes and the famous school, started by Mrs. Kelly for the daughters of the natives, where girls are transformed from savages into well bred young women. This release is particularly interesting for its portrayal of the improvements wrought among the natives under Uncle Sam's guardianship.

Earl Hurd of Los Angeles and the Bray studios have contributed the eighteenth release in the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons. The story concerns Bobby Bumps, who starts out in his Goatmobile propelled by a goat operating a treadmill. He meets a rival towing a pinafored maid, wearing a sunbonnet, on a small coaster. The maiden displays a sudden weakness where goatmobiles are concerned and immediately decides to change vehicles. Bobby goes joy-riding and breaks many things including the speed limit. Retribution follows fast. The disgruntled playmate again appears on the scene and disappears with the goatmobile's engine, bringing his rival's jaunt to a sudden end.

Billie Burke Among Indians

Producer of "Gloria's Romance" Has Difficulty in Finding a Tribe That is Not Camera Shy.

DIRECTOR WALTER EDWIN, producer of "Gloria's Romance," the new motion picture novel released through the George Kleine exchanges, in which Billie Burke is being featured, found himself right up against it when it came time to "shoot" the Indian scenes that form an essential part of the earlier chapters of the Rupert Hughes novel, for not an Indian tribe could be found which would permit picture work in its camp.

Finally, with the aid of Professor Histed, a noted photographer who, each year, spends many months among the Seminoles of Florida, and in whom the Indians have much confidence, a tribe was found which could be persuaded to pose for the motion picture camera. The squaws gazed in positive awe at Miss Burke's radiant tresses, for none of them had ever beheld the like before, and sheer curiosity getting the better of them, they approached to view the unusual hair at close range. Meanwhile Prof. Histed hastily explained to the chief that an unusual honor was being bestowed upon his people, because Miss Burke was regarded as a most wonderful creature by the white people and thousands of them paid high prices each season to simply behold her on the speaking stage. This argument had a perceptible effect on the old chief and when in addition presents of fresh meat, bolts of calico and quantities of gaudy beads were promised the tribe, the bargain was closed and the picture making began.

Russo-Japanese War Hero Now an Actor

LIEUTENANT VICTOR DE LINSKY, who was wounded seven times in the Russo-Japanese war, decorated for bravery and given an honorable discharge, has just finished playing an important role in "The Kiss of Hate," a Metro wonderplay of Russian romance and intrigue in which Ethel Barrymore is starred. The lieutenant proved a valuable asset to Director William Nigh, who consulted with him in many matters pertaining to Russian costumes, customs and correct settings. He declares it is going to be the greatest Russian photodrama ever shown.

Victor De Linsky.

The lieutenant was born in 1883, and being educated at the National Military Academy of Russia was graduated in 1900. For six years he served as an officer in the Imperial Russian Cavalry. He was permanently injured in the Russo-Japanese war, and on receiving an honorable discharge he was decorated with the gold and silver cross of the Order of St. George. He then entered the National Academy of Dramatic Art in Petrograd. He appeared on the speaking stage in Russia, meeting with much success.

Lieutenant De Linsky came to America soon after making his stage debut, and almost immediately obtained recognition here in motion pictures. He has played heavy leads and character parts for the last year with George Kleine, appearing in such well-known productions as "The Social Law," "Tainted Blood," "A Woman's Mistake," "Wilful Peggy" and "The Fashion Shop." Before that he appeared in "Hearts in Exile," "Samson," "One of a Million," "Sins of the Parents," "The Call of the Dance," "Runaway June," "Three Weeks," and several other important screen productions. The lieutenant is a linguist, expert fencer, fancy rider, swimmer and motor car driver. His hobby is make-up and crepe hair work.

Universals for Week of April 24

Laughs and Thrills Supplied by a Well-Balanced Program of Comedy and Drama, Well Supplied with Attractive Paper.

THE Universal program for the week of April 24, 1916, leads off on Monday, April 24, with Mary Fuller in the five-reel Red Feather feature, "Thrown to the Lions," for which special posters will be issued, including two six-sheets, with four-sheet streamers, to be used for combination 16-sheet or separately, together with two three-sheets and two one-sheets and window cards. "Thrown to the Lions" is followed by the Nestor release, "His Wooden Leg," a comedy with Billie Rhodes and Ray Gallagher. On Tuesday, April 25, the Gold Seal players, G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson will be seen in the two-reel society drama, "The Other Half," while on the same day the ex-stars, Francis Ford and Grace Cunard will appear in the Rex comedy-drama, "The Unexpected." The day's program closed with Billie Garwood in "Billie's War Brides," an Imp comedy.

On Wednesday, April 26, Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson, will be featured with little Zoe Bech in "Lonesome House," a Big U drama with a strong heart punch in it. Just so things won't be too serious, Billie Ritchie will cavort around on the same day in "Bill's Narrow Escape," an L-KO two-reel comedy. Universal Animated Weekly No. 17 closes the day with Jack Cohn's hot-off-the-Mexican-desert scenes of fighting down below the Rio Grande, with Director Beverly Griffith and Cameraman Gilbert Warrenton.

On Thursday, April 27, Fred Church, Myrtle Gonzales and Val Paul appear in the Laemmle two-reel southern drama, "Miss Blossom;" Francis Ford and the Ford family stage "Chicken-hearted Jim," a sea romance to be released under the Rex brand; and the first of Hy Mayer's "Travelaughs" entitled "Such Is Life in China" will be presented to laugh-loving Universalites.

"Why Mrs. Kentworth Lied," a three-reel Imp drama featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail takes premier position on the program for April 28, Friday. "The Newlywed's Mixup" tops off the day with Eddie Lyons and Betty Compson, the Nestor comedians, leading the fun fete.

"The Torrent of Vengeance," a Bison two-reel flood drama featuring Lee Hill and Ora Carew, which will be released on April 29. On the same day the Powers comedy, "A Family Affair," and the Joker comedy, "The Jitney Driver's Romance," with William Farney and Gale Henry in the cast, will be shot across the pan.

On Sunday, April 30, Ben Wilson, with Dorothy Phillips, will be seen in "Their Anniversary," a Rex Comedy. On the same day, Harry Benham and Edna Hunter will be presented in the Imp two-reel drama, "Through Flames to Love."

Just to top the week's program off the Universal throws in the twentieth episode of the serial, "Graft," in which Richard Stanton, Jane Novak and Glen White play the leading roles.

STRAND TO SHOW LOCAL NEWS FILMS.

Beginning April 14, the Strand theater will maintain what it calls the Strand Daily News Service, a departure in motion picture production and exploitation which promises to launch a new era in the showing of illustrated news on the screen. Events of interest which occur during the day will be photographed by the Strand cameraman and the pictures will be shown at the Strand the afternoon following.

A temporary arrangement has been made to carry the cameraman around the city, pending the completion of the Strand camera car, a motor car especially equipped with a mounted moving picture machine. The new car will be painted white, trimmed with red and properly lettered so as to be identified at a glance. Aside from the driver and the camera operator the camera car will carry a representative of the Strand, who will act as a sort of city editor and will direct the taking of the daily news.

GOODMAN DISPOSES OF SHAKESPEARE SCENARIO.

Robert Hastings Goodman has sold to The World Film Co., for Clara Kimball Young, a five-reel adaptation of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet." Mr. Goodman states that while he has not tampered with the Immortal Bard, he has introduced a great many scenes of pageantry, notably the funeral of Juliet and the fight betwen the adherents of the two rival houses of Verona.

Gaumont Promises Variety

Gertrude McCoy Starred in Mutual Masterpicture—School Subjects That Entertain and Instruct.

THE first Gaumont picture for May will be a Mutual Masterpicture, de Luxe Edition, which will be released the first day of the month under the title of "The Quality of Faith." The month's second Masterpicture from the Gaumont studios will be "The Isle of Love," released May 15. These five-reel features have been made at Jacksonville, Fla., where the Gaumont winter studios are located. May will see the various Gaumont stock companies move from their winter home to summer quarters at Flushing, N. Y., where the Gaumont laboratories are also located.

"The Quality of Faith" enlists as co-stars Alexander Gaden and Gertrude Robinson. This is their first appearance on the same screen since they played together in "As a Woman Sows." The story is that of a minister who espouses the cause of strikers who have been employed by his richest parishioner. He loses his church, and is finally saved from degradation by a girl who was reformed through his influence. In the company are Lucille Taft, John Reinhard, Henry W. Pemberton, Charles H. Travis, John Mackin and Alan Robinson.

"The Isle of Love" introduces Gertrude McCoy as a Gaumont star. In "The Isle of Love," written by Paul M. Bryan, the story deals with the experiences of a light opera star who retires to a quiet fishing village to study a new role. Incidentally, she wins the love of a sea captain.

The weekly split-reel, now released each Wednesday, will continue to show the interesting places in the United States which are being filmed in the series entitled "See America First." The Gaumont company now has a cameraman devoting his entire time to this work. He is at present located in the south.

On the same reel with "See America First" is Harry Palmer's animated Kartoon Komics. He has placed two new and interesting characters on the screen in Nosey Ned and Estelle. They alternate week after week. The first release of the month will be May 3, when Estelle, who is a Senegambian personage, will personally appear in an episode of the series which has been christened "Escapades of Estelle."

A standard feature from the Gaumont laboratories is the Mutual Weekly, the motographic news reel which not only covers the events of this country, but through powerful foreign connections secures remarkable pictures from abroad. Every facility afforded cameramen has been placed at the disposal of the Mutual cameraman who is filming the Villa expedition. Throughout the United States over two hundred cameramen are constantly in touch with the Gaumont main office. For their benefit a house organ is issued which will be sent free to any cameraman requesting it. The first of its kind, it is called "The Pocket Edition of the Mutual Weekly."

Desiring to give its one-reel subjects a special appeal, rather than to make them merely program fillers, the newest release from the Gaumont laboratories is to feature all phases of outdoor life under the title of "Reel Life." The aim is to release each week a single reel dealing with life out of doors, no matter in what form.

No announcement has been made of the photodramas to follow "The Isle of Love," Gaumont's May 15 release. However, several screen plays are now in preparation at Jacksonville.

"T. B." WITH NOVELTY SLIDE CO.

Mr. Thomas Bedding has been appointed publicity director of the Novelty Slide Co. This company which has recently leased an entire floor in the new fireproof building, 115-117 East Twenty-third street, New York, contemplates vast extensions to its business. Its two publications, "Novelty Notes," and "Rays of Light," will be issued under the editorship of Mr. Bedding, whose photographic and motion picture knowledge should assure the motion picture public something worth reading.

SMALLEYS FILMING "SHOES."

"Shoes" is the rather unusual title of a film play which is being produced by the Smalleys, with Miss Mary McDonald playing the leading part. In the supporting cast are such well-known performers as Mrs. Harry Davenport, Lena Baskette, the child dancer; William V. Mong and Harry Griffith.

The story was written by Stella N. Herron and adapted for the screen by Miss Lois Weber.

General Film Branch News

Larger Quarters Needed in Several Localities—Some Managerial Changes.

NOTWITHSTANDING that May 1 is the general accepted time for moving, the General Film Company, Inc., by reason of increased business found it advisable to move several of its offices to new and enlarged quarters without waiting for May Day.

Its Boston office will, on Monday, April 24, be transferred to Ferdinand and Isabella streets, where an entire building will be occupied. This structure is said to be one of the most adaptable for film exchanges in the country. Nothing was overlooked in its construction that would add to the expediting of the film business.

E. J. Farrell, formerly division manager of the General Film Company, assumed management of the Boston office Monday, April 10. Mr. Farrell, some time ago, was manager of the Boston office, prior to being transferred to take charge of the southern division. Having completed his work in that territory, he returned to his old post as manager of the Boston branch.

Business conditions in New Haven have assumed such a favorable attitude that the General Film Company has found it necessary to provide many additional films for use in that territory to meet the increasing demand. N. J. Hacking, formerly in charge of the Boston office, assumed management of the New Haven branch Monday, April 10.

The San Francisco office of the General Film Company is now thoroughly settled in new premises, 225 Golden Gate avenue, in a new building which was erected for the sole use of the General Film Company, whose business on the Pacific Coast has grown to such an extent and is still rapidly expanding, that it was necessary to obtain more adequate quarters than those which it previously occupied.

To satisfactorily take care of the requirements of the business in New York State the General Film Company recently took over commodious quarters in Syracuse at 445 South Warren street, from where the majority of theaters in that portion of the State will be looked after, instead of from Albany as heretofore.

The Newark office of the General Film Company, which up until a very short time ago had operated as a distributing branch, has found it necessary to obtain increased space in order to take care of additional business. Exhibitors in New Jersey will be pleased at this new arrangement, as it saves them the necessity of coming to New York for their program.

JESSIE ARNOLD WITH UNIVERSAL.

After an extended tour of Australia, Miss Jessie Arnold has joined the stock company at Universal City and will be seen in a nnmber of notable productions. Miss Arnold had considerable stage experience with William Collier and stock companies in various parts of the country before going into pictures. She has appeared to advantage with various of the larger motion picture companies, and her work attracted the attention of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company which engaged her as soon as she was at liberty.

Maud Hill

MAUD HILL, who has appeared in several Metro wonderplays, and was recently seen with Julius Steger in "The Blindness of Love," learned some very interesting history about that well-known star when they met for the first time on the floor of the Rolfe-Metro studio. Miss Hill is the widow of the late James H. Hill, the theatrical manager and producer. It was Mr. Hill who gave Mr. Steger his first engagement, when he came from Vienna to take up a stage career here.

Maud Hill.

At that time Mr. Hill was completing the cast for "The Fencing Master," in which Marie Tempest was starred. Mr. Steger made an impression upon Mr. Hill by his earnestness and his anxiety to make a place and name for himself in his newly adopted land. A friendship resulted from this meeting that lasted until Mr. Hill's death.

It was quite a coincidence that in the same company with Mr. Steger and Miss Hill, in "The Blindness of Love," was another artist that owes her success to Mr. Hill, and who was a member of the cast with Mr. Steger in "The Fencing Master." This was Hattie de Laura. The trio spent many hours together recounting stories of their early careers. Miss Hill married Mr. Hill when she was very young, and always had a desire to go upon the stage. Her husband, however, would never consent to this, and it was not until his death that she adopted a professional career. Her first appearance was with Florence Reed in "The Cowardly Way" and in "The Heart of New York," on the Equitable program.

TAYLOR TO ADDRESS AUTHORS' LEAGUE.

Charles A. Taylor, the well-known playwright, who recently joined the Metro scenario staff, has been invited to address the Authors' League of America at their next monthly meeting in the Plaza Hotel. The authors have come to realize the importance of turning their attention to writing for motion pictures, and want to hear from authorities upon the subject. Winston Churchill is president of the club.

Mr. Taylor is now at work picturizing Ella Wheeler Wilcox's books for the Metro program. The first one that will be presented will probably be "Maurine." Mrs. Wilcox is a member of the Authors' League, and it was at her suggestion that Mr. Taylor was invited to speak before them. Mr. Taylor will avoid speaking from a commercial standpoint, although he will be ready to answer such questions along that line as may be near to the author's heart. His main theme will deal with the great field that motion pictures offers the writer of today, and he will attempt to convince his auditors that it is their duty to turn their talents to the silent drama, where they can reach the great millions.

PAT SULLIVAN'S CARTOONS SCORE.

Pat Sullivan, cartoonist, creator of black-faced Sambo of newspaper fame, has fashioned a number of animated cartoons for Universal, which have excited much favorable comment. All of these split-reel subjects have to do with the adventures of Sammie Jonsin, the character created by Mr. Sullivan, when he was connected with the McClure Syndicate. The artist believes that drawing for reproduction on the screen is totally apart from the older profession. He has no patents and no exclusive method. Supplementing his knowledge of cartooning is just plain hard work and a fertile imagination, together with an insight into the technique and tricks of the motion picture camera. Prominent on Mr. Sullivan's staff is Arthur T. Crichton, a cartoonist formerly employed on several metropolitan dailies. Mildred Walker is another artist whose work Mr. Sullivan is exploiting. The first of her animated drawings will appear shortly.

Bronx Exhibitors to Hold Benefit

Will Run Big Motion Picture Entertainment to Aid Bronx Hospital Building Fund.

THE Cinema Exhibitors' Association of the Bronx, New York, are planning to hold a big motion picture entertainment and reception to aid the Bronx Hospital building fund on Tuesday, April 25, at Hunt's Point Palace, 163d street and Southern Boulevard. The festivities will commence at 8 o'clock in the evening.

It is planned to make the ball a novelty by replacing the usual grand march with a procession of moving picture players, of which a large number have promised to be present. King Baggot and Anita S. Stewart have been selected to lead the all-star photoplayers march.

The Valcour Players Club, an amateur dramatic organization of the Bronx, will present some of the hits from their play, "Step Lively." The Universal players will appear in sketches.

All connected with the industry of motion pictures are invited in making the event a success, financially and socially. President John J. Wittman and Vice President Henry Cole, who is chairman of the committee of arrangements, together with the members of the Cinema Club, are busy on the preliminaries and promise everything will be ready for a good time on Tuesday evening.

RIALTO TO OPEN APRIL 22.

The Rialto Theater, which has been in course of erection just two short weeks less than a year on the site of Hammerstein's former Theater of Varieties in Longacre Square, will reach completion and make its bid for public approval on April 22. The premier will be marked by dedicatory performances, but the public opening has been definitely set for Saturday. On the preceding evening, Friday, there will be an invitation performance to which 2,000 distinguished guests have been "bidden," and earlier in the week there is some sort of a secret affair scheduled to take place behind locked doors. No tickets have been or will be placed on sale at any price until Saturday, the 22nd.

The Rialto will offer the form of entertainment its projector, S. L. Rothapfel, introduced and popularized in New York—motion picture presentations with educational and travel moving pictures strongly emphasized and with the best music obtainable.

Douglas Fairbanks, foremost of legitimate film comedians, will be the star of the first feature film to be presented at the new theater, "The Good Bad Man," while Roscoe Arbuckle will smile from the screen in one of his familiar roles in a Keystone comedy, "The Other man." This part of the program will be supplemented by a series of travel pictures, news features and nature studies.

CARL ANDERSON LEAVING PARAMOUNT.

Carl Anderson announces that he is about to sever his connection with the Paramount Pictures Corporation and to seek other fields of endeavor. It was Mr. Anderson, it will be remembered, who planned the present highly efficient business system of the Paramount and installed that company in its present offices. Motion picture men who have visited those offices in the Rogers-Peet Building, Fifth avenue and 41st street, New York, concede that nothing like them exists anywhere else in the trade. Mr. Anderson is justly proud of his accomplishment and feels that there is more important work in the trade for him to do than running the business office of a distributing organization, hence his desire to seek other employment along different lines. There are a number of motion picture companies that could employ Mr. Anderson to advantage, so we hope soon to hear that he has made an important connection.

EMPIRE STATE MAY RESTRICT CHILD PLAYERS.

The Senate of New York State has passed the bill introduced by Senator Cromwell prohibiting the employment in motion pictures of children under the age of sixteen years unless there be given written permission by the head of the municipality in which the performance takes place. The bill sets forth that any person applying for such consent shall submit a statement outlining in detail just what the child is to do.

DETROIT EXHIBITORS HAVE NEW PRESIDENT.

Owing to the fact that he has disposed of the ownership of the Eagle theater and hence is no longer an exhibitor. Herman Speyer has resigned as president of the Detroit Exhibitors League and has been succeeded in that office by A. J. Kleist of Pontiac.

British Notes

DRURY LANE THEATER, with its glorious and time-honored traditions extending through the ages of Irving, Toole, Kean and nearly every other celebrity of the English stage, last Wednesday opened to a season of "The Birth of a Nation." On the previous Monday, Griffith's spectacle commenced its provincial tour at Manchester, where it will remain for six weeks, probably taking Glasgow next. The provincial engagements have not been arranged through the usual channels of any renting agency, but have been made direct with the theaters mentioned by Mr. Griffith's own representatives here.

It is not easy to discover exactly where the responsibilities of W. C. Scott, the agent of the American Company and its increasing family, begin or end since his return from his recent visit to Santa Barbara. Over and above the ordinary output of the winged alpha companies, the serial production, "The Diamond from the Sky," and the "Mustangs," Mr. Scott now announces the "Vogue" and "Signal" companies. "The Girl and the Game," the initial effort of the latter, will in all probability be available for public exhibition during the summer.

The proposal brought before the amusements sub-committee of the London County Council to close the moving picture exhibitions in and about the metropolis on Sundays was at the last meeting defeated.

According to a statement which has been given prominence in several daily newspapers, a company is now operating in this country and in the United States for providing lecturettes at moving picture exhibitions, illustrated with lantern slides. The first series are portraits of Indian native princes who have rendered signal service to the mother country in the war and the accompanying lecturettes describe and explain the doings of the originals.

The Gaumont Company, which purchased the American Company's serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," and is renting the same as an exclusive, is offering a public prize of £500 for the best suggestion for a sequel to the picture.

The managing director of the Trans-Atlantic Film Company, John D. Tippett, shortly intends releasing for its first run in London "The Dumb Girl of Portici," starring Anna Pavlowa, the Russian dancer. This production, I hear, will be screened at a specially engaged hall or one of the regular theaters in the West End.

The output of short comedies from the studio of the Rolin Film Company, of Los Angeles, is now being marketed in this country by the Pathe Company. No component of the exhibitors' program is so much in demand as the short, crisp, single-reel comedy, and the sale of these "open market" acquisitions, although yet only two a week, is encouraging.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

ROYALTY SEES "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

BEFORE the most distinguished audience that has been gathered in a London theater in years a special performance of D. W. Griffith's American spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was presented on Friday afternoon in Drury Lane theater, London, for a benefit to the Women War Workers Fund. The special matinee was under the personal auspices of Queen Mary, who occupied the royal box with Queen Alexandria, the Princesses Victoria and Mary and the Princes Henry and George of the royal family. Seats sold for the benefit for $15 each and the combined receipts exceeded $15,000. The entire box office takings were donated by Mr. Griffith by special arrangements made by his representative, Theodore Mitchell, during his recent visit to England. After the performance Queen Mary sent for Mr. Griffith's London manager and requested that her congratulations and thanks be extended to the American producer. Miss Olga Nethersole, the English actress well known in America, first interested Queen Mary in the benefit and took an active interest in its success.

In addition to the royal family the audience included King Manuel and Queen Amelia of Portugal, His Imperial Highness the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, the Belgian, Russian and Japanese ambassadors, Prime Minister Asquith, former Prime Minister Balfour, Lloyd George, Bonar Law, Unionist leader in the coalition government; the Duchesses of Marlborough, Hamilton, Beaufort, Norfolk, Sutherland, Abercorn and Buccleuch and the Duke of Newcastle.

Mutual Offerings

Masterpictures de Luxe, with a Number of Two, Three and One-Reel Dramas and Comedies Scheduled for Week of April 24.

NOTABLE among the feature releases for the week of April 24 are the Mutual Masterpictures, de Luxe Edition, "The Conscience of John David," a Horsley production featuring Crane Wilbur and "The Stain in the Blood," second of these de Luxe features from the Signal studios presenting Edythe Sterling, Norbert A. Myles and Robert McQuarrie in the principal roles.

Scene from "The Conscience of John David" (Horsley).

During the same week Mutual will release two three-reel features and three two-reel subjects in which Vivian Rich, Edward Coxen, Marion Swayne, Lizette Thorne, Frank Borzage, Anna Little, Jack Richardson, the Fairbank Twins —Madeline and Marion—George Marlo, Bert Delaney and others equally as popular with Mutual fans will be seen in the principal roles.

Crane Wilbur is the author as well as the star of "The Conscience of John David." For this production the author-star has selected an unusual and exceptionally powerful subject, in which he essays the role of "John David," a young millionaire, an idler and a waster in whom self-love is held dominant. His supporting cast includes Alice Rinaldo, who made her first appearance as a Horsley-Mutual star in the masterpicture, de Luxe Edition, "The Love Liar," Mae Gaston, recently signed to a long-term contract by David Horsley, John Oaker, Louis Durham, former "big leaguer," Farncis Raymond, Frederick Montague and several others.

Scene from "The Stain in the Blood" (Signal).

The signal studios second Masterpicture, de Luxe release, "The Stain in the Blood," is an extremely unique psychological drama, the scenes of which open in the far west and close in an Eastern metropolis. "The Stain in the Blood" has to do with a youth, who, left an orphan along with his sister by the massacre of their parents in an Indian raid, develops vicious traits at an early age which, in succeeding years lead him into a number of desperate escapades. Finally, aided by his sister and her husband, a young inventor, the youth is restored to manhood and his early life kept a secret from him.

Robert A. Dillon, who wrote the 'script for "The Stain in the Blood," has long been a close student of psychology and much of the data gathered by him in his researches has been woven into the story of the play. The question of heriditary influence, however, is treated by Mr. Dillon in an exceedingly novel but convincing manner in this production.

"The Stain in the Blood" was screened under the direction of Robert McQuarrie, who also appears in the role of the sheriff, adopted father of the hero of the story. The principals are supported by a strong cast of Signal-Mutual players, including Dorothy Nash, Willard K. Wilson and several others.

The two three-reel feature offerings for the same week include "A Broken Genius," an American production with a strong heart punch, the principal roles of which are assumed by Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne, for release April 27, and "The Carriage of Death," a Thanhouser drama to be released April 29, featuring Marion Swayne and Bert Delaney.

Included in the three two-reel subjects are "The Counterfeit Earl," from the American studios, for release April 24, in which Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh have the chief roles, a Thanhouser production entitled "A Man of Honor," for release April 25, with the Fairbank Twins—Madeline and Marion—and George Marlo in the leading parts, and "Unlucky Luke," a Mustang western drama for release April 28, in which the principal roles are handled by Anna Little, Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson.

Among the comedy releases for the same week are "Dad's Darling Daughters," with Riley Chamberlain and Walter Hiers, and "Willie Wendy to Willie," with Frances Keyes and Jay Yorke. Falstaff productions for release April 24 and 29 respectively; "Bugs and Bugles," featuring Carol Halloway and Johnny Sheehan released April 26, and "Two Beds and No Sleep," for release April 30, in which Orral Humphreys is the featured player. These last two names will be released under the Beauty brand. The Vogue comedies for the week feature Rube Miller and Madge Kirby in "The Island That Never Was," for release April 25, and "Bungling Bill, Doctor," with Paddy McQuire and Rena Rodgers. This will be released April 30. George Ovey, the funny man of the Horsley-Mutual studios, has a laughable role in "The Traitor," a Cub comedy for release April 28.

The week's releases are rounded up by "Mutual Weekly No. 69," which goes to the public April 26, and "See America First," the Gaumont travel picture, which will be released the same day.

GEORGE VERBECK JOINS INTERNATIONAL.

George H. Verbeck of Buffalo has been in the city the past week looking over the vaudeville situation. Mr. Verbeck was formerly in the agency business before forming the Buffalo Feature Film Exchange five years ago. During the past year he has had charge of the Empire Kriterion Film Exchange at Buffalo. Mr. Verbeck has entered into an arrangement with John F. McDonald,. proprietor of the International theater, Niagara Falls, N. Y., to look after the booking of vaudeville in the International and pictures in the Niagara, the Orpheum and the Happy Hour. Mr. Verbeck also will accept bookings of other theaters in his territory. His experience in vaudeville and pictures well qualifies him successfully to book any houses entrusted to him.

H. H. McCOLLUM MARRIES AUTHORESS.

One of the pleasant happenings at the George Kleine studios last week was the marriage of H. H. McCollum, who has attracted so much attention recently by his splendid work in support of Harry Watson, Jr., in George Kleine's "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer." The bride in the case is no less a person than Lottie M. Meaney, authoress of the big Cort theater success, "Pay Day." The marriage occurred Sunday last at the Little Church Around the Corner. The happy couple are installed at 343 St. Nicholas avenue, New York, where McCollum is now experiencing the many domestic joys that come the way of all travel-tired actors on similar occasions.

Thanhouser Classics are Ready

Florence LaBadie Plays Unusual Characters in "The Fugitive" and "Woman, Saint and Devil."

PLANS are complete for Florence LaBadie's appearance in the Thanhouser Classics, said to mark a style of production never before attempted by Edwin Thanhouser. Two of the five-part photoplays, "The Fugitive" and "Woman, Saint and Devil," both written by Philip Lonergan and starring Miss LaBadie, have been finished at the New Rochelle studio, and, according to an announcement, will be offered to exhibitors in an unusual way.

"The Fugitive" is called a thrilling story, departing from conventional standards of dramatic construction. The eternal triangle is omitted, there is no outraged innocence, in fact, all of the old standbys of the thrill-maker are avoided. Instead, there is a novel plot treatment, revealing the ingenuity of Mr. Lonergan and the skill of Director Frederick Sullivan in achieving surprising effects. With Hector Dion as the villain and Ethyle Cooke as the second lead, Miss LaBadie is promised the best of support.

Quite different from "The Fugitive" is the second classic in which the Thanhouser star will appear, "Woman, Saint and Devil." Here psychology is the force behind the action—a weird, freak psychology that parallels a famous case of medical record. With the thread of fictional circumstance woven into the story, Miss LaBadie has a vehicle suggesting "The Case of Becky." Director Sullivan made a particular effort to impress Mr. Dion, Miss Cooke and the other players with the psychological significance of the plot.

In booking these productions through the Mutual, Mr Thanhouser will inaugurate the biggest campaign the company ever undertook. Each LaBadie Classic will have separate driving power and the line of advertising matter will be unique. More than this, there will be a special service for picture patrons, details of which will be published in a few weeks.

IRWIN VISITS V-L-S-E EXCHANGES.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, has returned to New York, following a series of flying trips to the Big Four branch offices, in the middle west and eastern territory. These included visits to Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago and Minneapolis exchanges.

The tour was for the purpose of getting in touch personally with conditions in each territory, and to meet the many new recruits to the Big Four organization, which its constant expansion during the past few months has made necessary. The trip will be supplemented by visits to other offices, until the V-L-S-E's circuit has been completed.

Mr. Irwin met a number of prominent exhibitors during his tour, and at Minneapolis a gathering composed of leading members of the Northwestern Exhibitors' League called upon him and complimented him upon the steady success attained by his company's policies during the past few months.

In every section the Big Four's general manager found things humming at top speed, with exhibitors generally enthusiastic in their advocacy of the V-L-S-E program and principles.

NEW GENERAL FILM COMPANY MANAGER.

F. Flarity has been appointed manager of the General Film Company's Pittsburgh branch office, succeeding N. I. Ehrlich and has assumed his duties. Mr. Flarity had been employed in the General Film Company's Syracuse office as assistant manager and special traveling representative. He proved himself extremely efficient and, when the opportunity to promote him presented itself, President Kleine tendered to him the management of the Pittsburgh office.

SELIG OPENS BASEBALL SEASON.

The opening of the baseball season is interestingly and entertainingly presented in Number 31 of The Selig-Tribune, released through General Film Service on Monday, April 17. Thirty-one thousand "fans" see the Detroit "Tigers" defeat the Chicago "White Sox" by a score of 4 to 0. It was the largest crowd that ever attended a baseball opening day in Chicago. In the same number, a regiment of Zouaves arrive at Saloniki, Greece, and are dispatched to the front to meet the new German offensive. And then there's Eva Lane, aged 33, who tipped the scales at 204½ pounds and who reduces 36 pounds by schedule dieting and rules. There are many other timely events pictured in this number of the Selig-Trbune.

Ike Schlank to Direct New Company

Will Be General Manager of Unicorn Film Service Corporation, Releasing Twenty-one Reels Weekly.

THE Unicorn Film Service Corporation announces that beginning with April 24 it will inaugurate a program of twenty-one reels weekly. The offices of the company, which will be at 126 West Forty-sixth street, are in charge of Ike Schlank, general manager. Already seventeen exchanges have been opened, and by May 1 it it expected there will be ten others. The program will consist of one and two reel subjects, dramas, comedies and Westerns, intended primarily to be used by exhibitors to balance feature programs. With the single reelers will go lithographs of one and three sheets and with the doubles there will be one, three and six sheets. At the head of the Western division is A. J. Eslow, well known as the long time head of the Universal's Boston exchange.

Ike Schlank.

General Manager Ike Schlank has been connected with theatrical and show operations ever since he was a young man. His entrance into the film business was as an independent exchangeman, having offices in St. Louis, Kansas City, and Omaha, among others. It was through Mr. Schlank's efforts that the Unicorn was established, and the general manager has aimed to surround himself with a strong organization composed of men who are well and favorably known in the territory to which they will be assigned.

The exchanges that will be ready for service on the opening day are Boston and Buffalo, with Fred B. Murphy in charge. Subsidiary to these are Springfield and Bangor and Syracuse and Albany. W. L. Merrill will be at the head of the New York office, A. G. Steen of the Philadelphia, Sam Werner of St. Louis, J. W. Morgan of Kansas City, J. C. Woolf of Minneapolis, L. J. Meyburg of Indianapolis, L. J. Schlaifer of Chicago, L. C. Gross of Cleveland, Jack Craemer of Pittsburg, W. D. Ward of Detroit and Harry E. Coffey of Cincinnati.

Offices are now being organized at Atlanta, Dallas, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Portland, New Orleans, Washington, Seattle, Los Angeles and Denver.

HARRY H. POPPE AT LIBERTY.

Harry H. Poppe, who has conducted the publicity department of the Centaur Film Company with conspicuous brilliancy during the last year, has severed his connection with that concern.

Mr. Poppe, although one of the youngest advertising men in the motion picture trade, has been one of the most successful in the field. Entering the publicity ranks through the mediums of journalism and amusement promotion, in which his experience had been varied and thorough, Mr. Poppe made press-agenting a study rather than a mere bread and butter occupation, with the result that he has reduced the methods of exploitation and sales through printers' ink to an exact science.

Mr. Poppe's "copy" has long been welcomed by editors because of its polished construction, its crisp, direct style and its unerring "news value," the latter quality in particular being responsible for the large amount of space that has regularly been allotted his contributions by the trade journals.

"I am sorry indeed to lose him," said David Horsley, when asked to verify the report of Mr. Poppe's resignation. "I have made him every inducement to stay in my company, but he is ambitious and doubtless has plans in mind which he is anxious to work out for himself. All I wish to add is that if he remains in his present line the firm which secures his services will have its publicity handled by one of the most capable and reliable experts to be found in or out the industry."

Mr. Poppe has as yet made no announcement of his plans.

"Artie, the Millionaire Kid"

Ernest Truex Makes Good in a Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature for the V-L-S-E Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AN entertaining five-part comedy is not a matter of such frequent occurrence that it fails to arouse our interest to a greater degree than the ordinary feature. And the individual who seeks respite from his own troubles will find plenty to amuse him in following those of Artie, and in noting the philosophic manner in which he greets the new ones while he shakes off the old ones. The plot of the play has been cleverly developed, leading in quite a consistent way to the great moment when Artie makes good his threat to earn enough money within the year to buy out his father's railroad. The story commences with Artie's whirlwind entrance into his father's office after being expelled from college, announcing that he has had bestowed on him the degree of G.B., P.D.Q., whereupon the sunny smile on his father's face is quickly converted into a veritable thunder cloud, and son gets a trouncing along with some undesirable aid in making a hasty exit. Embracing the profession of a book agent, Archie lets himself into the grounds of a young ladies' seminary, where he enters into a romantic courtship with a pretty girl (Dorothy Kelly), and with the aid of his former tutor, who comes to town impersonating a rich widow for the furtherance of a financial scheme of Artie's, overcomes a rival suitor, places himself on a steady financial basis, wins the favor of his sweetheart's father, and gets even with his own dad.

Scene from "Artie, the Millionaire Kid" (Vitagraph).

The story was written by William B. Courtenay, and produced by Harry Handworth. In the supporting cast in addition to Ernest Truex, who as "Artie, the Millionaire Kid," does a clever piece of work, and pretty Dorothy Kelly, the sweetheart of the story, are John T. Kelly, delightful as Artie's dad, Albert Roccardi as Uriah Updike, William Dunn as the detective, and Etienne Girardot impersonating the rich widow.

This production is of the sort that should have a good run because it consists of the high-class comedy that is always acceptable.

"Following Villa in Mexico"

Five-Reel Mexican Series at Weber's Shows Realistic Side of the Situation Across the Border.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE series of Mexican pictures which has been showing at Weber's theater are being presented by the Feinberg Amusement Corporation, and were photographed by the Tropical Film Co. In the presentation of these pictures we have been spared very little, and many are the gruesome sights that are recorded for our benefit. Having an important place in the history of America they are of exceptional value, bringing home to the spectator more vividly than any word description possibly could the desolation of the country into which our soldier boys have ridden in their search for the bandit Villa. In the march of the miserably equipped Mexicans of both sides, the spiritless horses, the flocking of the half-starved refugees into Uncle Sam's domain, depending like children on his good will for food and shelter, we are reminded of the lack of vigor and of definite purpose that has marked the Mexican struggle from first to last.

In additon to views of the headquarters of the U. S. troops at Columbus, N. M., scenes before and after the raid, instances of Villa cruelty, such as the bodies of victims hanging by the necks from the limbs of trees, skirmishes between the Villa and Carranza followers, the gruesome toll of the battlefield and the partial burial and final burning of the dead, the films give a fine insight into the work of the Red Cross in Mexico.

The photography presented in this series is as good as could be expected under the circumstances; and it is evident that some of the scenes have been photographed at long distance.

"Where Are My Children?"

The Attitude of Modern Women Towards Child-Bearing Is Theme of Thought-Provoking Universal Drama Made by the Smalleys.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

USING a story by Lucy Payton and Franklyn Hall as the basis for a five-part picture, Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley dared to tackle a subject as vital as it is difficult. Because of a sincere, courageous and intelligent effort to present the problems of motherhood on the screen, the Universal Company and the producers directly responsible for the picture are to be thanked. "Where Are My Children?" is along lines that photoplays should advance if they are to contribute to a better understanding of human nature and the complexities of modern society. There is so much to commend in this picture; so much to excite discussion and earnest consideration that the failure to achieve a really notable production is the more to be regretted. The Smalleys made just one serious mistake—they wandered from the argument as indicated in the introduction.

Three classes of children are said to be awaiting birth beyond the Portals of Eternity—first, "chance children"; second, those who enter the world physically defective, and finally those with sound bodies, whose advent is welcomed. The contention is clearly enough stated in regard to each of these classes. Society would be benefited by the elimination of "chance children" and defectives, and to this end the circulation of correct information about birth control is advocated. The trial of a physician is plainly indicative of the Margaret Sanger case, and Richard Walton, the district attorney, destined to play an important part in the subsequent story, sympathizes with the physician. He favors birth control where only misery can result from large families. Likewise, when men and women are fit to become parents he is quite Rooseveltian in his ideas about a numerous offspring. All this is entirely reasonable.

Scene from "Where Are My Children?" (Universal).

But as the story progresses and grows more personal in following the lives of the district attorney, his wife, who does not want children, her pleasure-loving society friends, equally averse to motherhood, and a poor deceived girl, another issue becomes paramount. Instead of remaining a discussion of whether or not the birth of unwanted children shall be prevented, the interest is focussed on abuses of preventative methods. It is no longer a question of principle, but of the practices of a quack doctor, and the pertinence of the picture is lessened by the types of characters presented.

Advocates of the spreading of information such as is permitted in most European countries, base their arguments on the equal rights of the poor and the wealthy. The poor are burdened by large families because they do not know how to prevent them; the wealthy govern the processes of nature because they are able to pay for expert advice and treatment. Physicians of the stamp of Dr. Malfit are not patronized by women such as Mrs. Walton and her friends; in fact, safe means of checking child-birth are not a problem for the well-to-do. They are taken as a matter of course. The whole purpose of a campaign of the kind being waged by Mrs. Sanger and Emma Goldman is to place the same means within the reach of the less fortunate.

Then, "Where Are My Children?" departs from the path of strict consistency in the climax that finds the district attorney calling his wife a murderess because she chose to remain childless. According to his reasoning she has committed a crime, yet in the first part of the picture he unmistakably favored the publishing of a book on birth control. Surely the principle involved is not affected by the methods adopted. If Mrs. Walton was guilty of a crime, then her husband lent his influence to the making of many other criminals. In appealing for sympathy the authors lost sight of the most important significance of their theme.

These criticisms are based on the value of the picture as a serious contribution to discussion of an interesting subject. Merely as a photoplay, presenting very human characters in lifelike surroundings, "Where Are My Children?" is deserving of the highest praise. Tyrone Power's composure, combined with an indication of dominant power, gives great strength to the personality of the district attorney. He is supported with fine effect by Marie Walcamp, Helen Riaume, Juan De La Cruz and Rene Rogers.

Two World Film Dramas

"By Whose Hand?" Leaves Mystery Unsolved—"The Social Highwayman," a Series of Sensational Incidents.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"By Whose Hand?"

THE list of names introducing this Equitable drama is impressive in the extreme—Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf as co-authors of the story, Edna Wallace Hopper, Charles J. Ross and Muriel Ostriche as stars in the production made by James Durkin. Surely something out of the ordinary is to be expected from a combination such as this, and the result is not disappointing.

"By Whose Hand?" originally called "Who Killed Simon Baird?" ends with a question mark, suggestive of the termination of an episode in a serial rather than a complete five-part photoplay; but even if the mystery remains unsolved, an audience that has followed the evidence presented at a protracted trial is not left entirely in the dark. Probably there will be little difference of opinion about the identity of the murderer, and if there is a disagreement, so much the better. Unless a picture is interesting it does not excite talk.

Scene from "By Whose Hand?" (Equitable-World).

Confirmed photoplay patrons may fear a tedious half-hour when they discover that the greater part of "By Whose Hand?" is a court room production; but gradually they will find themselves becoming more and more concerned in the progress of the trial, advanced with exceptional skill to create suspense and a comprehension of the motives of the characters. We know what has happened; how Baird, while in the home of Maitland, was killed by a dagger thrust from behind a curtain, and how circumstantial evidence indicated Dave Sterling as the assassin, and we also know that Kimba, an Eskimo in the employ of Maitland, cordially hated the murdered man.

During the trial, as first one, then another of the witnesses appears on the stand, scenes dissolve into events of an earlier period, showing just how each of the characters was concerned in the life of Baird. When the jury acquits Steve, the judge faces the audience, asks for an opinion and we are saved the usual confession. Snow scenes representing the gold fields in Alaska are pictorially effective and there is nothing lacking in the performances given by the three featured players, although the most impressive figure on the screen is the Eskimo, as acted by Nicholas Duneaw. Among other things, this production indicates that the possibilities of photoplay trials have not been entirely exhausted.

"The Social Highwayman."

Not content with directing this five-part Peerless-World Film picture, Edwin August played two very strenuous characters in a story filled with violent action. It is melodrama of the old school, based on a Richard Mansfield play, in which the elusive Raffles-like hero lives in a house equipped with movable walls, secret passageways and a most remarkable elevator, to which he resorts when hard pressed. In the matter of ingenious mechanical contrivances this production is well supplied and, of course, they are of considerable value in a story introducing so many reckless law-breakers.

Scene from "The Social Highwayman" (World).

There is a suggestion of psychology, though not a very convincing one, in scenes indicating the pre-natal influences on the nature of Curtis Jaffray, later known as "The Social Highwayman." Because of poverty, his mother, shortly before his birth, steals a necklace, therefore Curtis is brought into the world with a tendency towards crime, which he develops by studying the careers of romantic highwaymen in the days of chivalry. Some of the settings in this introduction are colorful and attractive, although photography is not of the best.

Following a lapse of some fifteen years, we meet Jaffray in New York where, as a titled gentleman, he is enjoying a profitable social career. He entertains wealthy guests and takes their jewels with equal readiness, for, according to his creed, stealing from the needlessly rich is a virtue rather than a crime. The plot assumes new complications with the appearance of Hanby, another gentleman of unconventional morals, and the Countess Rossi, who long years before was Hanby's wife. Whatever "The Social Highwayman" may lack, there is an abundance of swift melodrama, acted with spirit by Mr. August, Ormi Hawley and John Sainpolis. There are many houses to which this production should be well suited.

"Scandal"

Fox Offering of Substantial Merit—Bertha Kalish in Role of Wronged Wife.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT IS an amply sensational picture, the newest Fox offering, "Scandal," in five reels and with Bertha Kalish in the leading role; but its situations are justified by the emotions that come from them convincingly. Depicting mean and sordid things and with no single character with any moral stamina, the dignity of suffering lifts it and makes it excite normal human sympathy in the spectator. This is partly due to the ability of Bertha Kalish as an emotional actress.

In her arms and body and on her face is truthfully revealed the growing of indignant passion from little to great, from minute to minute, as the soul learns how terrible its torment is by trying to tell it. She makes us see her "climbing sorrow" climb till, like a wave that has reached the rocky limits put around our humanity, it breaks in foam and relaxes for another spring to the sharp edges. But, as a picture actress, she is best only at the story's tense moments. In one or two places (her coming back to the house to hug her children when her husband is away) she was not content to merely make the story; but must still be trying to make a sort of climax where speed was called for. It is hard for famous people to forget their strength.

Responsibility for minor defects often rests with the director. Will S. Davis is both writer and producer of this picture and it shows his stength both in script-craft and screen-craft. It may not be his most human story so far; but he has laid out the material he chose, to excellent advantage and he has produced it full of imaginative moments that are often tremendous.

The whole cast is able. Eugene Ormond plays the scandal-maker who contrives to ruin the reputation of his friend's wife and then asks her to marry him though he is married. Mame Kelso plays his wife. Jerome Lawler plays the wronged husband. Edward Van Sloane plays the scandal-maker's son, whom the wronged woman flirts with and engages herself to for revenge on his father who so outraged her trust. It is a very able picture.

"The Little Samaritan"

A Delightful Feature in Two Reels by Essanay, with Thomas Commerford and Little Joyce Fair in the Leading Roles —Harry Beaumont Author and Director.

Count that day lost, whose low descending sun
Sees at thy hand no worthy action done.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

JUST by chance I had the good fortune to be attracted by the title of a photoplaylet by Essanay that will be released through the General Film Company on April 25. I write "good fortune" advisedly; for in these days of multiple-reel subjects the prevailing tendency is to pass over the shorter subjects, so far as extended reviewing is concerned, not in a slighting way, however, but for the very good reason that producers naturally prefer to have special attention drawn to those productions which have entailed large outlays of money.

"The Little Samaritan" has a very simple story, just as simple as the folk lore and songs of a country, and, like them, it touches the heart and brings out "the better instincts of our nature." It was written by Harry Beaumont, Essanay's leading juvenile actor, who will be remembered for his fine characterization of Keith Bourne, in Essanay's feature "The Discard."

In the direction of his own story Mr. Bourne is very happy. One cannot help noticing and admiring, in a number of instances, where he makes the pictures themselves "talk," instead of burdening the visualization with a subtitle; but in such instances he is given invaluable aid by Thomas Commerford and little Joyce Fair, whose acting is most praiseworthy.

Joyce Farley, the eleven-year-old child and pet of Mr. and Mrs. Farley, makes the acquaintance of an aged man in a public park, while walking with her maid one day. The maid tells Joyce's mother of the incident, and the mother warns her that strange men steal little girls like her; but Joyce cannot believe that her "strange man" would do such a thing.

Learning that the old man has no home, Joyce brings him to her home the next day, secretly, and assigns him the attic room. There she learns the sad story that his only daughter had disappeared when a little girl, and that he had sought her all his life, but in vain.

Mr. and Mrs. Farley had gone to the opera the evening in question, and, returning at a late hour, were distracted to find that Joyce was not in her room. They finally discover her and the aged stranger in the attic, and there it is also discovered that Joyce's mother is the long lost child of the old man.

Mr. Beaumont has added to the attractiveness of the story delicate touches of comedy here and there. Sometimes in a pathetic scene that brings a mist to the eyes, the spectator is forced to smile or laugh outright. These sudden gleams of sunshine gladden the dark places of the story, which, as a whole, makes a strong appeal to the heart.

Little Joyce Fair, in the titular role, is a very clever child actress. There is not the slightest show of bumptiousness or a self-satisfied air about her. Her whole soul is in her work. and she betrays not a sign of self-consciousness. In that affecting scene in the attic, where Joyce Farley listens to the tale of the aged man, her sensitive face revealing the tender sympathy that wells up in her heart, the spectator is similarly affected. A close-up view is flashed, and we catch sight of a tell-tale tear on her cheek as she pats the gray head of the old wayfarer. Then as he hides his face in his hands and sobs in his grief, we know that Joyce Fair's Joyce Farley is consoling him with the promise that she will be his little girl henceforth.

The scenes in which Joyce and her pet Pomeranian spaniel figure are very amusing. "Budde," she calls him, and no one must spell the name with an "ie." He, seemingly, understands every word she says, and with perfect reliance on his intelligence, she calls him her "leading man."

Little Joyce Fair was only nine years old when she won plaudits all over the country in "The Dummy," in which her part was practically the lead. If she continues the success she has made in "The Little Samaritan," Joyce one day may become one of our future moving picture stars. Here's that she may!

Thomas Commerford is a venerable and pathetic figure as the man whose only home is the big outdoors. His characterization can be well referred to in the future as the model for this type.

Director Beaumont made just one slip, in my judgment, in his supervision of the scenes. In the banquet given by Joyce and the old man to the down-and-outs, near the close, it would have made a stronger appeal if the old man and Joyce had seated themselves at the table with their guests. Contrast this banquet scene with the other one in "The Habit of Happiness," by Douglas Fairbanks, and you will see that there is a lack of true comradeship in the banquet scene of "The Little Samaritan."

Scene from "The Little Samaritan" (Essanay).

Fred Malatesta and Frances Raymond, in the parts of Joyce's father and mother, are excellent. Indeed, the fine all-round acting in "The Little Samaritan" might well be emulated by people in the casts of photoplays of much greater pretensions.

"The Love Mask"

A "Western" of an Antiquated Type in which Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid take the Leading Parts.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush

PERFECT photography, settings of superb beauty and the best efforts of Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely cannot alter the fact that this feature is lamentably weak in plot, shockingly careless in detail and altogether below the splendid standard heretofore established and maintained by the Lasky Company.

The subject is the familiar "Western" story of a good sheriff, a bad though highly picturesque and romantic outlaw and a "gal" who after some coquettish wavering between the respectable sheriff and the chivalrous outlaw very sensibly chooses the former. The sheriff in private life is a village blacksmith with a modest but safe investment, while the bandit resorts to the coarsest kind of highway robbery. We are kept guessing a little while as to just how the "gal" is going to decide. The sheriff aids the "gal" in a fight with a dastardly parcel of claim jumpers and his stock rises. Presently the sheriff helps the "gal" in robbing the stage which contains her stolen money and his chances brighten. Hold-ups abound in "The Love Mask." In one scene the "gal" gets the drop on the crowd in the saloon, the sheriff gets the drop on the

"gal," and the outlaw gets the drop on the sheriff—I might be mistaken about the order of the "drops."

The most serious fault of the play is its padding. The subject was altogether too thin for five reels. There are some pretty and cleverly worked out incidents, such, for instance, as the stealing of the silver spurs and the amateur "road-agenting" done by the "gal." The titles are at times flavored with what is supposed to be the real dialect of the old frontier. The scenes in the rustic courtroom and in the dance halls were well done and carried the right atmosphere. In other more important things attention to detail is lacking. It is never explained why the "gal," when she calls on the assayer and register, does not file her claim immediately. It is strange to have the sheriff find the silver spurs of the outlaw in the "gal's" cabin and then go away without any investigation. It is likewise remarkable that every letter and document flashed on the screen was in the same handwriting.

"The Crippled Hand"

Bluebird Photoplay in Which the Story of "Cinderella" Figures with Modern Variations.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE suggestion of the title given this five-reel photoplay, directed by Robert Leonard and David Kirkland, from a scenario by Calder Johnstone, is misleading. "The Crippled Hand" is not a gruesome tale of mysterious crime; quite the contrary, it is an exceptionally pretty version of "Cinderella," worked into a modern story of stage life that does not become intensely dramatic until the last reel. For the primary appeal of this picture, and it is fully strong enough to carry the five reels, one may look to the finely artistic production of a charming fairy tale, skilfully blended with a present-day environment.

No photoplay adaptation of "Cinderella" has brought out more satisfactorily the possibilities of motion pictures in imparting the illusive atmosphere of the land of dreams. The camera work was nothing short of excellent throughout the great number of scenes in which difficult double exposures and dissolves were utilized, the lighting was well judged to produce oddly attractive effects, and the settings, whether representing the haunts of fairies visited by the little girl, or the modern make-believe land of the stage, were of the best. As a beautiful picture, "The Crippled Hand" scores most decisively, and the wholesome story prepared by Mr. Johnstone is ample to hold the attention.

In the character of the lonely girl, unspoiled by the bitter experiences of a friendless existence in a great city, Ella Hall has a role for which she is perfectly suited. Transported into the kingdom of fairies, she makes an irresistibly dainty Cinderella and there is plenty of appeal in her playing of the demure little maid when in real life she meets an unusual opportunity. The management of a new musical comedy called "Cinderella" offers to employ the girl who can wear a certain slipper. After many applicants have made ludicrous efforts to fulfill the requirements, the poor little girl, tramping the streets in a vain search for employment, dons the slipper and enters the company of her Prince Charming.

The picture receives its title from the tragedy of a pianist whose hand was slashed by a heartless prima donna with whom he fell in love. His career ruined, he becomes a tramp, who appears in the singer's dressing room on the opening night of the play and causes a melodramatic scene, the most melodramatic in the production. Robert Leonard makes an ingratiating Prince, whereas Gladys Rockwell, in appearance and manner, is a convincing prima donna.

For the newest Ivan production which will be put into production immediately, Ivan Abramson, Director General of Ivan Productions, has engaged Bradley Barker as the male lead.

weak and erring. The powerful motif does not at first appear, though it is suggested from the outset, but it gathers force as the story develops into a fierce arraignment of modern institutions, including our political system and the heartless formality of our courts. Their insidious brutality does not appear to advantage even in contrast with the more promitive inhumanity of older countries of autocratic form of government. Our own lack of pity for the unfortunate designedly follows the gross cruelty of Jew-baiters and Cossacks in Russia, all being directed against a girl of naturally good impulses and scant opportunity.

The girl is Berna, a child of nature, half crazed by her first contact with so-called civilization, a Cossack massacre, her mind forever affected by the ringing of bells on that occasion. Thereafter, during the wrongs committed in our own civilization, when her undeserved suffering is most intense, she again hears the dreaded sound of those bells. The injuries done her are everyday affairs in city life among women engaged in a hopeless struggle against adverse circumstances—there is nothing forced or unreal about those circumstances—and the destroying influences against which she contends in vain drive her in the end to a mad attempt at retribution resulting in a double tragedy. The intent is to do away with evil that embitters human life, a lofty and generous purpose.

"The Children in the House" presents a good three-reel situation, worked out with considerable ingenuity and amplified to five reels by such outworn methods as the burning shack, the automobile chase of thieves by policemen, too near the Keystone style to have dramatic effect, and that last resort to picture-play manufacturer, the automobile run off a cliff. We had enough of that years ago to last us for a long time to come. It is only a pity to spoil an otherwise good story with such clap-trap. These resurrections of old business and the interpolation of a long fairy story break up interest in the main action and result in a composition below the Fine Arts' standard.

"The Girl That Didn't Matter"

Two-Part Balboa, Featuring Andrew Arbuckle and Margaret Landis, to Appear Shortly on the Program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

him to give a home to an orphan girl on the verge of a downfall, is splendidly cast. He gives an unusually pleasing impersonation of Judge Hoover, who early in the story becomes a senator, and later marries the girl he befriended.

Margaret Landis plays the feminine lead very pleasingly. This is the first time that Miss Landis has been seen in a star part with Balboa. She proves herself well worthy of the opportunity given her. The sister of the Judge is the angular, old-maid type that always brings a touch of comedy. The plot of the story concerns itself principally with a conspiracy to force Senator Hoover to sign a certain undesirable bill. As a last resort a woman lobbyist is brought into the case and is about to win the senator's signature to the bill by promoting undue interest in herself, when the orphan girl suddenly appears on the scene with evidence which frustrates the lobbyist's plan.

A pleasing production in which a touch of refined comedy is an added attraction.

Miss Greenwood in "None So Blind."

Winnifred Greenwood, who for the past several years has been co-starring with Edward Coxen in short length dramas filmed at the American's Santa Barbara studios, has been elevated to stardom and will shortly be seen in two Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, now under way.

Her initial appearance as a star of these feature productions will be in the role of "Emily Alden," heroine of "None So Blind," a Masterpicture, De Luxe, in which she portrays a noted Broadway theater star who abandons her profession to become the wife of a celebated painter. Julian Lamothe, author of "None So Blind," created the role of "Emily Alden" especially for Miss Greenwood, a part in which her many requisites as a screen star are particularly well adapted.

Trio of Kalem Releases

"The Millionaire Plunger," "A Lucky Mistake" and "The Trail of Danger."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE fifth instalment of the George Bronson Howard serial, "The Social Pirates," proves that the author's fertility of invention is still in good working order. "The Millionaire Plunger" is supplied with a theme that excites the sympathy of the spectator at the opening of the picture, and then proceeds to deal him a goodly measure of live action, much of which is of a quietly humorous nature. An elderly woman, who is employed as a laundress by Mona and Mary, has been victimized by an unscrupulous stock manipulator and all her savings swept away by worthless securities. The son of this man, who inherits his father's wealth, is an idler and a roue. When the two lady avengers learn the woman's story, they advise her to apply to the wealthy heir. He refuses to do anything about the matter, and thereby makes one of the biggest mistakes of his life. The Dauntless Duo get busy right away, and when the curtain is rung down on their neatly-staged scheme for righting this particular wrong, the laundress has her money back with substantial interest, the wealthy heir has received a scare of imposing proportions and the man in front has been given thirty minutes of strictly first-class entertainment.

Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby continue to enter into the spirit of Mr. Bronson Howard's cleverly-drawn characters with undiminished zest, and to furnish ocular demonstration that they are lucky girls to have been selected for two such admirable parts, and that the author is equally fortunate in having two such accomplished and engaging young women to head his cast. and Thomas Lingham are members of the efficient supporting company, and the same completeness of detail in the staging that has marked producer James W. Horne's direction of the preceding instalments is plainly visible in "The Millionaire Plunger."

"A Lucky Mistake."

Whatever mistakes, lucky or unlucky, are made by the characters in this one-reel "Sis Hopkins" comedy, the seeker after amusement will make no error in being a witness to the comic adventures of the cast. As the maid-of-all-work in the Skeezicks household, Sis is the unabashed fly in the ointment of domestic peace, the cause of incessant confusion and a well spring of laughter to everyone else. Henry Murdock, Richard Purdon, Arthur Albertson, Fred Schierbaum, Olive West and Mary Kennedy are her able assistants.

"The Trail of Danger."

The "big idea" in this number of the "Hazards of Helen" seems to have been to crowd as many "thrills" into the picture as it would possibly stand. At any rate, that is the impression it gives the spectator, and Helen Gibson performs her different stunts with neatness and dispatch. "The Trail of Danger" justifies its title. George Williams, Roy Watson, P. Pembroke, Harry Schum and Ray Lincoln have the remaining roles.

Lionel Barrymore in "The Quitter."

Lionel Barrymore, who has just completed his work in "Dorian's Divorce" for the Metro program, being starred in that production with Grace Valentine, will be stared alone in "The Quitter," a sensational five-part feature which has just been put into production. The exterior scenes will be photographed along the Mexican border, and the company does not anticipate that it will be much of a holiday. Motion picture operators are experiencing considerable difficulty in that locale at present. But it was necessary for the Metro players to go there, as the sceney and buildings they desired can only be found in that section.

"Silent Selby"

Three-part Mustang that Claims Attention Through Excellence of Construction and Pleasing Dramatic Action.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE old style western drama, it will be remembered, distinguished itself as a rule by crudeness both of design and dramatic action, and a tiresome repetition of theme. The plot generally used was so largely a matter of melodrama, and so far removed from the interesting realities of our modern West that the critic became bored and found himself at a loss for new expression in seeking to describe "the same old thing."

With the Mustang productions we have learned to expect something fresh, and new, and human in theme, and we are not often disappointed. "Silent Selby," written by Kenneth B. Clarke, keeps its thread of interesting moving at a lively gait, and succeeds so well in keeping the spectator guessing as the climax of the play approaches, that one is forced to acknowledge clever workmanship in the construction of the play.

The theme of this play is not entirely new. The fact of the matter is the plot originates in the same situation that has been frequently used in western dramas. There is a favorite cowpuncher, "Silent Selby," and a villainous ranch foreman, both of whom are in love with the pretty daughter of the ranch owner. It is in the development and treatment of the latter portion of the story that production wins out. The young woman is discovered in a love scene with her hero, who has been discharged by the jealous foreman, and overheard to promise a meeting in the morning, kidnaps her and carries her off to his shack, where he ropes her to a chair. In his drunken state he fails to keep watch and the young woman escapes. Next morning after the girl has told her father of the insult, the foreman is found murdered. The only clue which the authorities find points at the discharged cowpuncher. An hour later, however, the father of the young woman confesses that he killed the man because of the insult to his daughter. He is of course acquitted, and a happy situation closes the picture.

The players are Thomas Chatterton in the title role, Anna Little, Dick La Reno and Jack Richardson, who, by the way, plays a double role effectively.

"Molly Make-Believe"

Marguerite Clark Portrays a Girl of Romantic and Fanciful Disposition in Famous Players Subject.

THE Famous Players released on April 17 "Molly Make-Believe," an adaptation of the story by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott. Marguerite Clark has the name role, that of a girl who in her effort to help her impoverished grandmother takes her little brother and in the night slips away to the city to earn her own living—and for a while succeeds in an unusual way. The picture is well staged by J. Searle Dawley.

"Molly Make-Believe" will have marked interest for children and feminine grown-ups—it is an ideal matinee attraction. For an evening house it might be described as a pretty story. It is more entertaining than plausible, if it be judged by the stern rules of probability. Miss Clark is delightful as the young girl of the country who plays with her child friends or as the budding young business woman who is the "whole works" in the singular correspondence concern she establishes.

J. W. Johnston is strong as the railroad man who extends aid to the two freight train stowaways. Mahlon Hamilton has the role of Carl Stanton, the young railroad official who under circumstances of trial meets Molly, and later learns to know her better and to love her. Gertrude Norman is a motherly Grandmother Meredith.

The scenes of the railroad wreck lend atmosphere to the trip of Molly and her little brother to the city. They are deftly woven into the story. The strongest situation, one filled with pathos, is where Molly, in her suit of squirrel skin, goes to the bedside of the dying little girl, one of those to whom she had brought sunshine. The scenes of the ball, of Molly in her Oriental garb intruding among the dancers and, masked, chancing a number with her "prince," the young railroad man, are filled with interest. There is a romantic conclusion, one in which Molly wins her "prince," to the discomfiture of the unbending young woman and the still more frigid mamma who had aimed to corral the young man as their own.

"One of the Pack"

A Physiological Photoplay in Two Parts, Produced by the Lubin Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

M. BRIEUX, the accomplished author of "Damaged Goods," is credited with having turned the searchlight of his profound knowledge upon certain forms of physical vice and exposed to public view in the playhouse the consequences of breaking the moral law that governs such transgressions, "even unto the third generation." Tom Gibson, the author of "One of the Pack," has used a similar theme in his two-reel screen drama—but with circumspection. He does not dwell for any unnecessary length upon the physiologic aspects of his transgressor's condition, discreetly referring to it as a case of "tainted blood."

Pierre Moret, the leader of a band of criminals, known as "The Pack," is the owner of the impure corpuscles. He wants to marry Helen Marston, but has a dangerous rival in Fred Hayden, a young clerk. When Helen's father suffers a breakdown and a transfusion of blood becomes necessary, young Hayden offers himself as a subject, and Moret is forced to do likewise. A blood test of the two men is taken, during which Moret manages to change the samples, and Hayden is told that his blood is infected. He at once gives up Helen, becomes reckless and joins Moret's band. Dr. Langham, who knows the truth about the leader of the pack, prevents him from consummating his marriage with Helen, although the physician's professional honor stops him from divulging the secret to the wife. A safe robbery that Fred commits puts him in possession of the truth about Moret, leads to the death of the criminal, the reformation of Hayden and his union with Helen.

Granting the author's premise, it must be written down that he has constructed a quick-moving and ingenious melodrama. It is acted in good style by George Routh, Jay Morley, Louis Fitz Roy, Eleanor Blevins, George Berrell, Robert Gray and A. H. Hayn.

"Conductor 786" Rides Again.

After a well-earned vacation in Florida "Conductor 786" comes back to New Rochelle to don the blue suit and brass buttons again in Falstaff comedies. It is Reily Chamberlin, originator of the character; as emperor of the rear platform, with number 786 on his hat, Riley has won a big following.

THE TENDER-HEARTED BOY (Biograph), April 10.—A one-reel D. W. Griffith re-issue, this photoplay has the juvenile spirit of a story by Oliver Optic. The character of the hero, his trials and the happy ending of the tale are handled in the most obvious manner, but there is a humanity to the picture that will appeal to most people. Robert Harron and Mae Marsh have the leading roles.

OTTO, THE BELL BOY (Lubin), April 10.—One of the funniest farces that Edwin McKim has written and produced, the picture is made doubly amusing by the unctuous comedy acting of D. L. Don. The humor of the situations is irresistible and Mr. Don, aided by Patsy De Forest, works intelligently and effectively to extract every possible laugh.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 29, 1916 (Selig), April 10.—Ernest Schiller, the lone pirate, who captured the British steamship Matoppo; Bulgarian prisoners near Saloniki, Greece; Turkish prisoners at work, Saloniki; removing giant palms from fair grounds, San Francisco; camp scenes, Columbus, N. M.; flood, Flint, Mich.; U. of C. athletic meet; Phillies' star pitcher makes aeroplane flight at St. Petersburg, Fla.; American troops en route to Guerrero.

THE HOYDEN (Vitagraph), April 10.—The character of the heroine of this one-reel drama is fully indicated in the title. Bess is a diamond in the rough, but finds out that knowing how to "put up her dukes" is a very handy accomplishment for a lady in her station of life at the opening of the picture. A few terms at boarding school polishes her off, however. Wm. E. Wing has written a capital little drama and it receives its just dues in the hands of Mary Anderson, Webster Campbell, Otto Beninger and Edith Reeves. Directed by Dave Smith.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF BOSTON (Essanay), April 12.—The many historic buildings and places of interest in Boston are shown in this number of Mr. Bailey's drawings. This series is instructive and interesting, Faneuil Hall and Bunker Hill monument being included in the first five hundred feet. A western scenic completes the reel.

FASHION AND FURY (Kalem), April 12.—A wife who has a mania for buying expensive frocks furnishes the leading motive of this one-reel comedy. The humor of such a subject will appeal to everyone—except the husband, who has to foot the bills. The picture is entertaining and is capitally played by Ethel Teare, Jack MacDermott, Victor Rottman, Myrta Sterling and H. Davenport.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 30, 1916 (Selig), April 13.—Regatta of U. of C. oarswomen on Lake Merritt; U. S. troops drilling at Fort Scott, Cal.; Baby Parade, Harlem Carnival Week, New York; Carranza troops at San Jose, Mexico; tug of war, Agricultural College, Maryland; U boats at Wilhelmshaven, Germany; Senator Warren G. Harding nominated for President, Chicago; Mexican orphans, Cavanea, Mexico; reinforcements of English troops, Doiran, Greece; "Wild Bob" Burman killed in auto race, Corona, Cal.; exhibition of artillery, Douglas, Ariz.

THE BATTLE ROYAL (Vim), April 13.—This is a very amusing comedy in which a feud arises between two mountain families over a most trivial matter. One son of each house loves a daughter of the other, and even the sweethearts are forced to take to the gun much against their inclinations. The visitation of a common enemy, the revenue officer, who has nosed out the fact that moonshining is the business of the respective families, makes the two families companions in misery, and cements the broken friendship.

ROMANCE AND RIOT (Kalem), April 14.—John E. Kevan, a new writer for the Sis Hopkins comedies, makes a favorable impression with this one-reel offering. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of April 22, page 645.

THE SLEUTHS (Vim), April 14.—Pokes and Jabbs on the trail of a famous jewel from the forehead of an idol, leads to a number of amusing situations in this one-reel comedy. The finish is particularly clever.

SUSIE, THE SLEUTH (Vitagraph), April 14.—Edith Storey has the title role in this one-reel comedy by Kenneth S. Webb, and offers a distinct character creation of much humor. The plot unfolds a broad satire on the detective drama, and also enlists the services of Antonio Moreno, John Costello, George Stevens, Robinson and Rose E. Tapley. George D. Baker directed the production.

THE RACE FOR A SIDING (No. 75 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), April 15.—The matter will not admit of argument! Helen's railroad must make substantial acknowledgment of her services to the company or stand forth as conspicuous examples of monumental ingratitude. Not a week passes but she risks life and limb in the line of duty, and always succeeds in saving the company a heavy monetary loss. In "The Race for a Siding" she prevents a wreck, thwarts a band of freight car thieves and assists in their capture.

MR. HOUSEKEEPER (Lubin), April 15.—An echo of "All the Comforts of Home" is found in this one-reel comedy, the plot turning on the scheme of a married man to rent the rooms of his wife's boarding house for his own advantage during the absence of the head of the establishment. The plot has good comic possibilities and Billie Reeves, Eleanor Blanchard and Francis Joyner bring out the points with skill. Clay M. Greene wrote the scenario and Earl Metcalfe made the production.

THE BEAUTY HUNTERS (Selig), April 15.—James Oliver Curwood has written a number of splendid photoplays whose scenes are laid among the snow and ice of the frozen North, but he has reached double zero in "The Beauty Hunters." The inanity of the whole affair is expressed in the names of the two leading characters, John Queerphiz and Jane Apeface. A sense of humor is evidently not one of Mr. Curwood's gifts from the gods.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, NO. 12, "The Slums" (Essanay), April 10.—Bennett, a friend of Pollock's is put on the witness stand in this episode and certain facts are brought out about a slumming tour, the party being made up of Mary Page, Amy Lerue, the theatrical manager and Bennett. During the tour Pollock meets the party and insulted Mary, who threatened to shoot him. Evidence is also brought out that hints of enemies that Pollock had made, and that the dead man had hired a pair of thugs to murder Langdon. The interest is well sustained during this instalment.

THE PARASITE (No. 3 of "The Social Pirates") (Kalem), April 10.—Another male being who wars upon women is attacked and routed by Mona and Mary in the third episode of the George Bronson Howard serial. The battle is an exciting one. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of April 15, page 459.

WIVES OF THE RICH (Selig), April 10.—The story of this three-reel photoplay is not new, either on the screen or in real life. It is well worth telling over again, however, and Allen Curtis Mason, the author, has done so with commendable skill. The situations are developed with a discreet regard for probability and the climax is handled in a novel and effective manner. T. N. Hefferon has given the picture careful direction, and Harry Mestayer, Grace Darmond, Lafayette McKee, Lillian Hayward and Emma Glenwood form a thoroughly capable cast.

THE MAN WHO CALLED AFTER DARK (Biograph), April 11.—The plot in this two-part drama suggests possibilities not fully realized in Walter Coyle's production. A different method of construction might have made the story more convincing; but even as it stands, the picture is acceptable.

MILLSTONES (Essanay), April 11.—Melodrama, with the punch always in evidence is the dominant quality of this two-reel photoplay. There isn't much novelty in the picture, the thief who turns honest being one of the leading characters, but the story has been made to yield good dramatic value and is effectively played by Darwin Karr, Nell Craig, Edmund F. Cobb, John Cossar and Peggy Sweeney.

THE GREATER WRONG (Lubin), April 13.—This is one of the best photoplays written and directed by George W. Terwilliger. A review of the drama, a three-reel subject, was printed in the issue of April 22, page 644.

HAUNTED AND HOUNDED (Knickerbocker), April 14.—That excellent dramatic device, the woman who marries under the belief that her first husband is dead, is employed to advantage in this three-reel photoplay. The story is absorbing, even with a conventional ending. Madeline Pardee plays the leading character with feeling and skill.

THE LAST ADVENTURE (Essanay), April 15.—Lilian Drew, John Lorenz and Edward Arnold form the oft-quoted triangle in this three-reel photoplay and by their excellent acting give the story its full dramatic value. The author has shown a praiseworthy regard for probability during the unfolding of the plot, without sacrificing the interest. The character played by Miss Drew is sketched with a sympathetic insight that renders it very effective. The mounting of the picture is artistic.

SIN'S PENALTY (Vitagraph), April 15.—The settings of this three-reel photplay and a number of the effects called for by the story are almost enough to insure its success. The California winter scenes in the mountains are very beautiful, and Fred W. Hiller has fitted his plot into them with convincing skill. The scenario is strong in theme and character drawing and has been ably directed by William Wolbert. Credit for capably acted roles belongs to Corinne Griffith, Otto Lederer, Anne Schaefer, Webster Campbell, Mary Anderson and Fred W. Hiller.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE GAY LORD WARING, April 24.—J. Warren Kerrigan, Lois Wilson, Bertram Grassby, Maud George and others, give able performances in this five-part adaptation of Houghton Townley's story, done into a scenario of F. McGrew Willis and directed by Otis Turner. It is a well produced and resonably entertaining picture. A review appears on page 642 of issue of April 22.

THE CRIPPLED HAND, May 1.—The story of "Cinderella" is presented here with modern variations. Exceptionally well staged and photographed, the first appeal of the picture is in the artistic beauty of the scenes. Robert Leonard, Ella Hall and Gladys Rockwell are in the cast. A review may be found on another page.

Fox Film Corporation.

BLUE BLOOD AND RED, April 9.—A lively and pleasing farce in buckeroo backgrounds. A large audience plainly took pleasure in it. A review can be found on page 639 of the issue dated April 22.

SCANDAL, April 16.—The characters of this tragic story are a bit sorted but the picture has been so ably handled by producer and players that it makes a very marked impression. It is a dignified and effective picture. Bertha Kalich has a highly emotional role and does splendid work. A review can be found elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 67 (Gaumont), April 12.—American scenes of interest are featured in this number, including college events, fire in lower New York, baseball teams at work and others. Some views of U. S. troops going to Mexico are also shown.

A MIX-UP IN PHOTOS (Vogue), April 16.—Rather an amusing farce comedy in which a father plans a matrimonial match for his son, and in sending him a photo of the heiress whom he is to meekly accept, he accidentally sends the wrong photo, enclosing, instead, the picture of the pretty secretary of the heiress. At the betrothal banquet an undignified but amusing mixup occurs.

COUNTERFEIT LOVE (Vogue), April 18.—An eccentric comedy number, by Thomas Delmar, featuring Rube Miller and company. The scenes occur chiefly in a counterfeiter's den and are of a rather vague, knockabout sort. The humor is only fairly strong.

NUMBER PLEASE (Beauty), April 19.—A telephone comedy number, featuring Carol Halloway, John Sheehan and John Steppling. The lineman crosses the wires and mixes up two conversations in a way that brings about complications. The slangy substitutes are not always clever and the plot is not very strong, though the presentation and cast are pleasing.

THE BOOKWORM'S BLESSED BLUNDERS (Beauty), April 23.—Another amusing and very nice number in which Orral Humphrey plays the male lead with Lucille Ward playing opposite him. Mr. Flyleaf, who is absorbed in books to the elimination of most other things, one day walks by accident into the home of the lady next door, whose heart has been pining for him. This is the commencement of a romance which ends in the marriage of the loving pair. A funny incident occurs when Flyleaf is wondering how he is going to obtain the wherewithal to support his lady love. Some money placed by accident in a book that he sells out of his second-hand book store brings him a flock of customers, and so Providence solves his problem.

BUGS AND BUGLES (Beauty), April 26.—An amusing farce comedy in which an old military man who has taken up the hotel business by way of excitement has his troubles with his servants and his guests and most of all with their love affairs. A mixup occurs over a note which gets into the wrong hands. This is very funny and will be pleasing to most audiences.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

SILENT SELBY (Mustang), April 13.—A three-part western drama of more than ordinary merit. The story of this production was written by Kenneth B. Clarke, and is of excellent construction and interesting theme. Thomas Chatterton plays the role of Silent Selby with Anna Little in the feminine lead. Too much cannot be said of the attractiveness of this young actress, who has a great deal of talent as well as beauty. Jack Richardson plays his usual bad man's role and does it well. Dick La Reno and W. Tedmarsh are also valued members of the cast. The last reel of the story concerns itself in clearing up a murder case wherein a father kills the man who tries to wrong his daughter. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

THE LEOPARD'S BRIDE (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe, Centaur No. 92), April 13.—A five-part Centaur picture in which Margaret Gibson, William Clifford and Nan Christy have the principal roles. The production has a fairly interesting story which brings into play a leopard whose talent as a screen actor is not to be questioned. The story tells of how Captain Morey of the British militia in India is sent by his superior omcer and rival in love to a post in the interior. Here, not receiving any mail from the girl he loves, he finally falls sick of jungle fever and is tended by a pretty girl, presumably of Hindoo origin, who falls in love with him, and on the appearance of the Captain's real sweetheart goes into the jungle and sacrifices herself to a leopard. The makeup of the players appearing as Hindoos will be questioned. Also some of the jungle roads have too much the appearance of well-trodden park roads.

A FLICKERING LIGHT (Mustang), April 14.—An excellent two-part drama featuring Anna Little, Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson. It is the story of a girl of the western dance halls who had been told by unscrupulous ruffian that no man would ever marry a girl like her. One night a ranchman happens into the saloon, notices the girl, and later in a state of intoxication asks her to marry him. To evade the other man, who is to return later, to make good an evil proposition she accepts the ranchman. The development of the story after this point is especially human and attractive. The picture is a masterpiece of its kind.

THE GIRL FROM CHICAGO (Thanhouser), April 18.—A two-reel crook story by Lloyd Lonergan, featuring Gladys Hulette and George Marlo. This runs along in a bright, entertaining manner, beginning with the appearance of the "girl" in a restaurant infested by an organization known as "The Birds of Prey." She joins the gang and pulls off some small stunts. Then toward the close her surprise comes. This never gets up much tension, but is quite clever in certain ways and holds the interest well.

MASTER SHAKESPEARE, STROLLING PLAYER (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe—Thanhouser, No. 94), April 20.—A five-part production from the Thanhouser studios which is based on the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy. In the play, which features Florence La Badie and Robert Vaughn, two lovers, quarrel over the claim of the two writers to the authorship of the Shakespeare plays. Some excellent types have been used, especially in the portion of the picture which takes us back to the time of Shakespeare. It is not quite clear, however, whether the production as presented is intended as a burlesque on the controversy or not. Some of the earlier portion of the picture might have been omitted. The battle scenes in Mexico have the effect of padding.

THE MAN'S SIN (Thanhouser), April 20.—A three-reel number, written by Philip Lonergan, featuring Grace De Carlton, Daniel Leighton and others. The story has a strong sex interest, but is handled in an acceptable way. The plot shows the ruin of a young girl by a man who refuses to marry her. The girl baby is born and the mother dies. Later the child grows up and becomes a trained nurse. She is engaged to care for her father, who has a wife and another daughter. The plan of the spinster aunt to gain revenge for the wrong done her niece by accomplishing the ruin of the legitimate daughter, is outwitted by the nurse. This contains some unpleasantness, but holds the interest. Miss De Carlton does pleasing work in the double role.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 27, 1916 (Pathe), April 1.—Interesting items of this number are the scenes of the train wreck at Amherst, Ohio, a fine collection of orchids grown at Hackensack, N. J., the sailors of the Atlantic fleet spending a day ashore at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba; the 8th Cavalry machine gun corps on its way into Mexico, and the flood in Buffalo streets caused by the overflow of Cazenovia Creek.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 28, 1916 (Pathe), April 5.—Interesting items in this number are pretty babies in Harlem's parade; Glen Martin instructing the U. S. Flying Corps, testing a new armored car, and the New England ship yards reopened.

LUKE'S DOUBLE (Phunphilms), April 12.—An excellent farce comedy in which Luke, who impersonates a book worm, goes to sleep and has a remarkable dream, in which he sees his double make love to his sweetheart, and handle more money than he himself ever saw. Some very funny situations occur through the double identity, including a fist fight in the police station. This comedy contains nothing in any way objectionable.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE GIRL THAT DIDN'T MATTER (Balboa), April 15.—A two-part production in which Andrew Arbuckle is featured, with Margaret Landis playing opposite him. The picture is a pleasing one, although not altogether fresh in theme. The story treats of how a kind-hearted judge gave an orphan girl brought before him in court, a home with himself and old maid sister. Later, he is elected Senator, and the remainder of the story concerns itself with a conspiracy to get him to sign a certain undesirable bill. He marries the orphan girl, who is the means of breaking up the conspiracy. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 7 "The Hooded Helper" (Pathe), April 10.—"The Hooded Helper" is the title of this number of the series, in which the scrip of paper is again located in an ash barrel by an old negro mammy. Golden's wife is relocated in the home of her husband along with her daughter Margery, and the parrot stolen from the chicken coop by a negro again takes a hand. An excellent number.

Triangle Film Corp.

HIS LAST LAUGH (Keystone), April 9.—A farce comedy somewhat out of the common, but only mildly amusing. Not up to the high Keystone average.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

LITTLE BILLY'S SCHOOL DAYS (L-KO), April 23.—A country school number, featuring Little Billy, Olive and Fatty Voss. A juvenile love affair and amusing mischief in school are the chief ingredients. It brings forth considerable laughter and is appealing.

HIS WOODEN LEG (Nestor), April 24.—A comedy number, by Floyd Byrnes, featuring Roy Gallagher and Billie Rhodes as a young married couple. The rich uncle bequeaths his wooden leg to his nephew, who tries to lose it unsuccessfully. Later he discovers it contains a fortune in money. An old theme handled in an amusing way, which well bears repetition.

BILLY'S WAR BRIDES (Imp), April 25.—This features Wm. Garwood as a young bachelor, who dreams that after the war all men must have not less than three wives. He marries four girls of different nationality, who present him with twins, triplets and even more babies. The idea is broad, but handled in a harmless way. It proves fairly amusing.

THE UNEXPECTED SCOOP (Rex), April 25.—A good light subject, written by Clifford Howard, introducing Jack Connolly and Jack Nelson as rival reporters and Myrtle Gonzalez as the girl. The plot has a clever swing to it and the situations are bright and pleasing.

LONESOME HOUSE (Big U), April 26.—This number, written by O. M. Robinson, features Thomas Jefferson as an old school teacher. He finds his wife after years of separation, through one of his small pupils, who was injured while at play. The school scenes are typical and the story one of fair strength.

SUCH IS LIFE IN CHINA (Powers), April 27.—This consists of a number of Chinese views, interspersed by some of Hy Mayer's humorous drawings. It makes an amusing novelty and is also quite instructive.

THE NEWLYWEDS' MIXUP (Nestor), April 28.—A comedy number, by Al. E. Christie, featuring Eddie Lyons, Betty Compson and Stella Adams. The young husband finds his wife's letter to her brother and becomes intensely jealous, not knowing the relationship. Their quarrel is quite amusing. Slight in plot, but pleasingly presented.

THE JITNEY DRIVER'S ROMANCE (Joker), April 29.—An eccentric comedy number, featuring Gale Henry, Wm. Franey and Milburne Moranti. The jitney driver is the successful rival of an Indian prince. The action is very funny in spots and the low comedy characters are pleasing.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THROWN TO THE LIONS (Red Feather Photoplay), April 24.—A strong five-reel offering, adapted by Norbert Lusk from a story by Wallace Irwin. This gives a faithful picture of modern metropolitan life. It is introduced by a prologue, dating back to the time of Nero, showing a young girl thrown into the lions' den. The analogy is drawn that innocence is still sacrificed in the life of today, as in the past. The story of Linnie Carter is very strongly set forth. She finds happiness, but only after facing many troubles. This rises gradually to a climax and holds the interest well. Mary Fuller, Joseph Girard, Clifford Gray and others appear.

THE OTHER HALF (Gold Seal), April 25.—A two-reel number, by Jacques Jaccard, featuring G. Raymond Nye, L. M. Wells, Roberta Wilson and others. Because a wealthy man in high social life objects to his son marrying a gambler's daughter, the gambler sets out to prove that the wealthy man is also smirched, as he draws revenue from properties owned in the red light district. This he succeeds in proving, and the wealthy man consents to the marriage to save his good name. This is quite well produced and makes an interesting, though rather unpleasant, study of underworld conditions. The character of the theme is the chief drawback.

BILL'S NARROW ESCAPE (L-KO), April 26.—A two-reel low comedy number, featuring Billy Ritchie, Eva Nelson, Gene Rogers and Louise Orth. This consists largely of knockabout situations. Billy's wife rents the house to some moving picture people and jealousy results. This gets up a fair degree of humor in spots, but has numerous vulgar touches which keep it from being the best sort of comic. The last reel closes with the studio on fire and some explosions.

MISS BLOSSOM (Laemmle), April 27.—A splendid two-reel Southern story, featuring Val Paul, Myrtle Gonzalez, Alfred Allen and Fred Church. Val Paul scores a fine little success in his characterization of the mountain lad who didn't want to be known as "po' white trash" in spite of his drunken father. The story is made human and appealing by this one character, though the others are also pleasing in their way. The settings are as picturesque and beautiful as one could wish, and the plot a good one. This number is sure to find favor with the average patron.

WHY MRS. KENTWORTH LIED (Imp), April 28.—A three-reel number, by Hugh Weir, featuring Jane Gail, Matt Moore, Augustus Phillips and Howard Crampton. This is a story of crime and detection. The first two reels are gripping and exceptionally well presented. The third reel is not so strong, as no sufficient reason is shown why the young wife shielded the nephew at the risk of her own life. The blackmailing scene at the beginning, the murder later and commencement of work by the rival detectives is excellently done. While not entirely convincing in denouement, this sustains the interest throughout and is better than the average offering of the type.

THE TORRENT OF VENGEANCE (Bison), April 20.—A two-reel subject, by Henry McRae, in which the great floods in Southern California of recent date are put into a lively story. The plot itself concerns two rival towns. One town tries to drown out the other one and the second diverts the flood so that it flows back on the second. There are some real thrills in this and numerous personal risks are taken by the performers. The scenes are all well taken and the number, as a whole, is a highly interesting one.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 29, 1916 (Vitagraph), April 10.—A novel feature of this number is an elephant parade down Fifth avenue, New York. Other of the principal events include the Cornell Dam at Croton, N. Y.; Technical School, Oakland, Cal., drilling its students; giant tractor, Harrisburg, Pa.; launching giant dredge, Hammonton, Cal.; U. S. troops arrive at the border for patrol duty; vaccinating chickens, Davis, Cal.; Buffalo base ball team training at Harrisburg.

ARTIE, THE MILLIONAIRE KID (Vitagraph), April 17.—An excellent five-part comedy, featuring Ernest Truex and a typical Vitagraph cast, including Dorothy Kelly, Jonathan Kelly, Girardot and Etienne. The story treats of how a young man expelled from college becomes a book agent, enters the grounds of a ladies' seminary, falls in love with a pretty girl, and forces his way on to fortune. In a year's time he makes good a threat that he has made to the effect that he will made enough money to return and buy out his father's railroad. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

World-Equitable.

BY WHOSE HAND? (Equitable), April 17.—An entertaining mystery drama ending with a question mark. A prolonged court room scene works up considerable interest and holds the attention, as noted in a review appearing on another page. Edna Wallace Hopper, Charles J. Ross and Muriel Ostriche are featured in the picture.

THE SOCIAL HIGHWAYMAN (Peerless), April 17.—Besides directing the production, Edwin August played the principal role in this Peerless World film adaptation of a drama in which Richard Mansfield starred. The scenes move rapidly and are filled with effective melodramatic action. A review appears on another page.

Miscellaneous.

FOLLOWING THE FLAG IN MEXICO (Tropical Film Co.), April.—A five-reel series of scenes covering the main incidents of the present Mexican situation. These pictures give a good insight into the Red Cross work in Mexico, showing also many scenes in connection with the march of the U. S. troops into Mexico, skirmshes between the Villa and Carranza followers, and many gruesome sights which necessarily follow in the wake of battle.

"A MESSAGE TO GARCIA."

Before Elbert Hubbard, one of the most famous of the writers and thinkers that America has produced, met an untimely death on the ill-fated "Lusitania," he often had expressed his admiration for motion pictures and his intention of writing new works or adapting some of his old masterpieces for the screen. He frequently had commented on the motion picture possibilities in his "A Message to Garcia," a preachment that is universally known and admired. It was confidence in the judgment of Elbert Hubbard and a full realization of the dramatic potentialities of his widely-famed article that led Edison to send a motion picture company to Cuba to film a story based on "A Message to Garcia."

This five-reel feature, which has not been scheduled for release as yet, is a remarkable production in every way. Based on a masterpiece of literature that is known in every part of the world, having a plot that is highly dramatic and of absorbing interest, and presenting the story with an imposing and beautiful background of tropical settings, it must stand as one of the great conceptions and great productions of the year among five-reel features. Robert Connes and Mabel Trunnelle are starred in the production and among the other members of the cast are: Bigelow Copper, Herbert Prior, Helen Strickland and Dorothy Traham.

PATHE'S "LITTLE MARY SUNSHINE" RECEIVES HIGH PRAISE.

"Little Mary Sunshine," the five-part Pathe Gold Rooster play, has been given by the Philadelphia North American the "three stars" distinction, an award of merit granted to very few pictures. Jessica Granville-Smith, the reviewer, speaks of the picture as follows:

"Three-year-old Baby Marie Osborne is featured in this Gold Rooster production, and everything else in the picture is subordinate to her. There is a story, to be sure, a well-worked-up little love story, as love stories go, with a pleasing mixture of humor and pathos. There are other actors in the cast, too, Henry King being the chief of them, with Marguerite Nichols and Andrew Arbuckle, but they are all outshone by this little star. Then there are many pretty scenes, and the photographer has done his share in making the background a charming one for the little lady. The spontaneity of the child actress, with her blessed baby ways, and the joy that radiates from her little self to every one around her is a wonderful relief after some of the more common types of photoplay. It will delight children, and drive away the blues from the grownups."

"THE SECRET MATING."

The "eternal triangle" gives way to four-cornered love affair in "The Secret Mating," a forthcoming five-reel American Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, by J. Edward Hungerford. William Russell is directing the production and has the lead in the play. Two mismated couples are thrown together and one husband tries to teach the other a lesson. His method gives the play intense drama and makes it gripping from first to last. William Russell, Hylda Holliss, Charlotte Burton and Harry Keenan have the principal roles.

"THE END OF THE WORLD."

The next feature of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th street, New York, entitled "The End of the World," is scheduled for release on about April 20th. It is a stupendous spectacular production in six parts, presenting in a fanciful manner the most likely results of the presence of a comet in the earth's atmosphere, and portrays convincingly the panic and havoc which follow. A pleasing love story winds its way through gripping scenes of real flood and holocaust.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"AT PINEY RIDGE" (Selig).

One of the most exciting dramas ever released through V-L-S-E in point of story, plot and action will be "At Piney Ridge." This drama proved to be David K. Higgins' greatest stage success and its powerful pathos and sincere comedy are known to hundreds of thousands of theater goers who will cordially welcome the screen version. The famous play has been faithfully adapted for the motion pictures by Gilson Willets, the versatile novelist and feature pictureplay writer. "At Piney Ridge" is a veritable breath from the Tennessee mountains and features Miss Fritzi Brunette as "Cindy Lane."

Scene from "Piney Ridge" (Selig).

The date for the release of this five-part drama is Monday, May 1.

Some of the most beautiful settings ever shown in motion pictures will be viewed in "At Piney Ridge." Mountain scenery of the type true to the story is presented, together with the cabin homes of the mountaineers.

The atmosphere of sunny Tennessee, shortly following the close of the Civil War, is carefully preserved. Miss Brunette is said to enact her strongest character role and is ably assisted in the unfolding of the drama by Al W. Filson, Frank Clark, Vivian Reed, Leo Pierson, Edward J. Piel, James Bradbury and other Selig players. Every type in this wonderful drama is drawn from life by Producer Wm. Robert Daly.

A BEAUTIFUL SCENE IN "THAT SORT."

One of the beautiful scenes in "That Sort," a forthcoming Essanay feature, taken from the stage play of that title, written by Basil McDonald Hastings, is that of a woman of the demimonde, repentant, kneeling in church before the image of the Savior. The scene was taken in the Essanay studio where the chancel was set up. The background was arranged by the Thomas O'Shaughnessy Co., of Chicago, who make up special designs in church windows and decorations. A corps of artists with several great windows, specially designed, one with the picture of the Savior bearing a cross and the crown of thorns, were sent to the Essanay studios to arrange the set. The scene is an exceptionally artistic conception.

PATHE'S "GIRL WITH THE GREEN EYES."

Pathe announces the five-reel feature, "The Girl with the Green Eyes," adapted from the play of the same name written by Clyde Fitch, Katharine Kaelred and Julien L'Estrange, well known players on the legitimate stage, are featured in this production, which retains to a remarkable degree the many merits of the original play. It is a forceful drama with the jealousy of a young married woman over her husband as the main theme.

The play is beautifully produced and contains many strong situations. It will be put upon the Gold Rooster Program and released May 16th.

WRITERS PRAISE MARY CHARLESON.

Praise of the highest possible order is bestowed upon Mary Charleson in a joint letter written her by the scenario writers who comprised the Lubin editorial board at the time when Miss Charleson was doing "The Road o' Strife" for that concern. Although separated, and with different companies now, the writers could not refrain from joining hands in congratulating Miss Charleson for her wondeful work in "Passersby."

"As the 'colleen of the screen' we have watched your work for months," reads the letter, "and your remarkable portrayal of Margaret Summers in 'Passers By' demonstrates without a doubt that you deserve your place at the very top of the profession. Our heartiest congratulations and best wishes." The communication is signed by Adrian Gil-Spear, Emmet C. Hall, L. S. McCloskey, Morbert Lusk, Clay M. Green, Harry Chandlee and Shannon Fife.

SIGNAL TO FILM "JUDITH OF THE CUMBERLANDS"

Director General J. P. McGowan, of the Signal Film Corporation, has just closed negotiations with Alice McGowan for the film rights to her popular novel, "Judith of the Cumberlands." Although the scenario has not yet been prepared, it is understood that Miss Helen Holmes will be cast in the title role, with the direction in charge of J. P. McGowan. Filming of this story will follow the completion of "Whispering Smith," which is now under way.

"WON WITH A MAKE-UP" (Universal).

"Them actor folk ain't no good, daughter," said The Deacon to his daughter, Josephine, as a moving picture company started to work in front of his episcopate.

"But I love William King, the leading man, father," protested Josephine.

It all happened in Skinneateles, N. Y., one winter's day. The starving, fallen woman had been thrown out of her home by the cruel, silk-hatted landlord when William King, the leading man, interfered and said:

"Stop. That woman is a mother; have you no heart? Would you throw her out in the snow on this cold winter's night?" (Tint film for night effect.)

Scene from "Won With a Make-Up" (Universal).

Josephine, our heroine, sees the movie actors hard at work and falls in love with the handsome leading man. After many amusing adventures with papa, The Deacon, they elope. "Won with a Make-Up" featuring King Baggot is the cleverest burlesque of the movie game staged in many moons. It was scenarioized from the story by Elliott H. Robinson and produced by Henry Otto and those who see it will undoubtedly regret that it has been confined to one reel. Frank Smith and Edna Hunter support Mr. Baggot.

"DORIAN'S DIVORCE" (Metro).

Lionel Barrymore and Grace Valentine are starred in "Dorian's Divorce," a five-part feature produced by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., which will be released on the Metro program May 1. This production will serve to introduce Miss Valentine as a full fledged star on the Metro program. She has been featured in several previous Metro productions, including "Black Fear" and "The Blindness of Love."

Many of the most interesting scenes in "Dorian's Divorce" were made aboard the revenue cutter Woodbury, which Metro bought especially for this production. The company worked on board the vessel as she came down from her home port at Portland, Me., to a new berth in the Hudson River. The story of "Dorian's Divorce" is one of high finance, society and mystery.

The supporting cast in "Dorian's Divorce" is unusually strong and includes William Davidson, Edgar L. Davenport, Lindsay Hall, L. R. Wolheim and Buckley Starkey. The feature was written and directed by O. A. C. Lund.

"THE OATH OF HATE" (Knickerbocker).

A sea story with the sea as one of the leading characters, and not merely a background for the action, is the forthcoming three-reel Knickerbocker Star feature in the General Film Service, featuring Henry King.

"The Oath of Hate" is sworn by Mark Stone, a sea captain, when he is jilted by the girl he expected to marry. She is heartless and mercenary, and as the drama progresses it becomes evident that she cares nothing for the man she has married. Yet the oath of hate must work itself out, and we see Mark Stone, stricken blind, cast overboard on a dark night by a seaman who owed him a grudge. After a strenuous battle with the sea he reaches the shore, and by accident meets a doctor who informs him that the blow on his head has restored not only his sight, but also his normal mind, which has been deranged by another blow sustained while endeavoring to rescue a girl from ruffians. Thus is revealed the fact that Mark Stone is not what he appeared to be, a man of base passions, but a victim of brain pressure. In his right mind, he sets out to find the girl whom he married, not for love, but to be the mother of children who might perpetuate his oath of hate. In the presence of the great miracle of fatherhood, he discovers that it was love which caused their strange mating.

Mr. King not only enacts the principal role, but is also responsible for the masterly direction of the picture, which is one of the most unusual offerings yet released under the Knickerbocker brand.

UNIVERSAL CAMPAIGN BOOKLET.

That human dynamo, Nat. G. Rothstein, advertising manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, after weeks of preparation has now on the press the most elaborate advertising campaign book for the serial unique, "Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," that has ever been issued for any moving picture—serial or otherwise. Not only is this big book far more elaborate than any other, but it is more helpful to exhibitors, and crammed, jammed full from cover to cover with the most enthusiastic high-pressure sales talks, advertisements and exhibitors' helps. The latter are fully illustrated. Indeed, a portion of the book is a complete catalog of the Universal props furnished by the supply department. Every conceivable form of advertising is not only listed in this mammoth campaign book, but exhibitors are told in plain and simple language just how to use the advertising cuts, the publicity or press matter, the posters, cut-outs, novelties, photo lobby displays, banners, heralds, slides and other live and up-to-date advertising prepared for them and ready to use by even the most inexperienced.

CALIFORNIA RUSHING NEW STUDIO.

Because of the elaborateness and size of the scenes incident to "The Woman Who Dared," the adaptation from C. N. and A. M. Williamson's novel, in which Beatriz Michelena is now being starred, the California Motion Picture Corporation is rushing work on a still further extension to the big sunlight stage at its San Rafael plant, and, according to advices, this new improvement will be completed, inclosed in glass for protection from the wind, and otherwise equipped for work before the week's end.

By this extension the California firm is more than doubling a stage capacity that in the past has been adequate for the accommodation of such pretentious productions as "Mignon," "The Unwritten Law," etc. Moreover, in addition to this sunlight stage, there is an inclosed stage electrically lighted. The combined floor space is said to give the California producers more extensive stage room than any other concern engaging but one company at a time.

"The Woman Who Dared," which is immediately responsible for the enlargement, will, according to advance reports, be distinguished for the expansive wealth of its sets. The story concerns itself with intrigue in the highest court circles in Europe, and consequently must depend on surroundings of ultra-elaborateness for much of its atmosphere. An opera house interior with a complete company assembled on the stage is among the big scenes mentioned.

This elegance will find an effective contrast in another angle taken by the story, which carries it to the less polite intrigue of thieves and crooks in Rome's underworld. The coincidence by which these two threads, one spun close up to the throne and the other in the gutter, gives the plot much of its dramatic interest.

"DICKSIE" THE GIRL AND "DIXIE" THE HORSE.

Helen Holmes and Director J. P. McGowan are now earnestly at work producing "Whispering Smith" in ten reels, which will be released in two five-reel chapters.

An interesting fact in connection with this activity is that Miss Holmes will portray the role of "Dicksie," the young owner of a large ranch in the "Crawling Stone" country, throughout the production using as her mount "Dixie," the horse presented to her by the author of the novel, Frank H. Spearman. The horse was named for the heroine of the story.

The supporting cast includes Leo Maloney, Thomas C. Lingham, Paul C. Hurst, Sam Appel, William Brunton, N. Z. Wood and G. H. Wisschusen. Mr. Lingham has been playing leading parts in important productions of Coast Studios for some time, and was secured by the Signal Company to play the role of sheriff in Medicine Bend in "Whispering Smith." Mr. Hurst will be cast as Sinclair.

"HER NAKED SOUL" (Essanay).

Two Essanay favorites, Nell Craig and Darwin Karr, are featured in this three-reel piece, which is distinctive for the beauty of its interior settings and the action in its exteriors, as well as giving both leads an opportunity to display the utmost of their dramatic ability. As the cafe set had to be used for numerous scenes and not for short flashes, a costly one was erected. Not the least of the action in the piece is arrived at when the hero meets the heroine. He skids his car into her and knocks her against the curb. When the stunt was tried it succeeded beyond expectations and not only Miss Craig, but the director himself was upset. A retake furnished the desired picture, but the actress had already been considerably bruised by the first attempt. The piece will have an appeal to women, who will sympathize with the heroine in her desperate attempt to make a good wife for her husband amid countless temptations. It was directed by Lawrence Windom.

PRIZE TRAIN IN "HAZARDS OF HELEN."

Kalem's permanently leased railroad equipment of locomotives and passenger coaches was last week found inadequate when the director began work on "The Trail of Danger." The climax of this episode calls for the use of a wreck-train with its huge derrick and crane to swing Helen from the saddle of a horse through the air to a speeding train.

After extensive negotiations and no little pulling of wires with railroad officials higher up Director Davis finally secured permission to use the Salt Lake Railway's prize wreck-train equipment for the production. This equipment is probably the latest in use on an American road and as part of the Baldwin Locomotive Company's exhibit at the San Francisco Exposition attracted considerable attention.

The monster wreck-train was one of the sights of the week at the Kalem studio and attracted more than the usual number of curious visitors to the "Hazards of Helen" studio. The newly built station which has been designated an official stop on the Salt Lake Railroad also came in for its share of attention. The station is completely equipped in every respect for its double use as a real railroad stop and as a motion picture studio.

Coincident with the official sanction to name "Kalem" a stopping place in the Salt Lake route-books Helen Gibson was named station master. Helen declares that so far she has found the position merely honorary, but that she is willing to work any time the railroad adds a salary to the title.

"GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN" (Vitagraph).

"God's Country and the Woman" is a special Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature that is bound to take its place among the greatest motion picture plays yet produced. It is an eight reeler and was photographed in the deep snows of Great Bear Valley, up in the San Bernardino mountains of Southern California.

Bear Valley is 9,000 feet above sea level and is reached by a dog road over which Rollin S. Sturgeon and his Vitagraph players journeyed to camp for six months while filming this photoplay which has to do with the law of virtue in the great Northwest.

William Duncan, George Holt and Nell Shipman are the principals who enact the drama of a girl, a villain and her husband. Dog trains going full tilt up hill and down and a series of great human adventures holding together in perfect cohesion a wonderful story, make "God's Country and the Woman" a film masterpiece.

"A PERFECT MATCH" (Universal Comedy).

Eugenics is all right in a way, but candidates for matrimony should weigh enough. Just take a slant at Gale Henry as she stands in the full glare of the sunlight silhouetted against the white sand. 'Senough to discourage any one from getting married. All of which goes to prove the ancient aphorism: "If you're thinking of getting married, take your fiancee to the beach. If she still looks good to you after splashing about for two hours, get the license; otherwise, caveat emptor."

Gale Henry assumes this side-splitting get-up in "A Perfect Match," which was produced on the Universal side of the Pacific Ocean by Roy Clements and his gang of hilarious hyenas. Besides Gale Henry, William Franey, Milburn Moranti, Lillian Peacock and Charles Conklin browse around in the picture and slip across the chortles whenever the camera points their way.

JOHN BARRYMORE TO STAR IN "THE RED WIDOW."

Bombs to the right of him, bombs to the left of him, bombs in his pockets, bombs in his hat, bombs in his hands—bombs everywhere, but they are the least of John Barrymore's troubles in the forthcoming Famous Players production, "The Red Widow," which will be released on the Paramount Program April 20.

"The Red Widow," by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, was one of the biggest comedy successes of a few years ago and it has such an abundance of action and comic predicaments embodied in the tale that it is ideal for adaptation on the screen. In addition to having John Barrymore in the stellar role of Cicero Hannibal Butts, the corset salesman, the film has three members of the original cast who scored personal successes in the stage version of the play. They are Flora Zabelle, who again appears as Anna Varvara; John Hendricks and George E. Mack, who play the Baron and Popova respectively.

TRIANGLE MAKES CHANGE IN MONTH-END RELEASES.

By a switch in release dates Douglas Fairbanks and "The Good Bad-Man" change places with Norma Talmadge and "The Children in the House" on the Triangle service. Thus Miss Talmadge joins the April roster of stars and Fairbanks, who was on the opening programme of the month, will initiate the May service. The advance of Miss Talmadge is due to the popularity which her "Martha's Vindication," released in March, achieved. It was easy to hold back "The Good Bad-Man" because S. L. Rothapfel has selected this new comedy drama as the opening feature of his new Rialto theater in New York.

"ALONG THE BORDER" (Selig).

"Along The Border," a Selig one-reel drama released through General Film Service Saturday, April 8, is a most timely poduction. Tom Mix stars in this pictureplay, which carries the atmosphere of the Mexican border. To make the story the more interesting it can be stated that many of the scenes were filmed along the Mexican frontier in localities which are now in the public eye because of the Mexican situation. In brief, the plot centers about the adventures of Americans who are taken captives by Mexican bandits and who escape through the bravery of a girl. The atmosphere of the drama and the scenes along the Mexican border make "Along the Border" an unusually interesting production.

"THE QUALITY OF FAITH" READY FOR SCREEN.

A photodrama which combines a remarkable number of tense situations is offered by the Gaumont Company in "The Quality of Faith," a Mutual Masterpicture, to be released May 1. Alexander Gaden and Miss Gertrude Robinson appear together as stars in this production. In the course of the play, over 1,000 extra people have been used in filming the great mob scenes incident to a strike at a cotton mill. The direction of this big feature has carefully preserved the atmosphere of the conflict between capital and labor.

Mr. Gaden has the role of a young minister who is contented to preach on abstract subjects and marry the daughter of his wealthiest parishioner. Just before the wedding, however, he becomes interested in working among the down-trodden factory employees of his fiancee's father's mill. There he learns of the workers' wrongs, and braves his future father-in-law's wrath by taking up for them. He is jilted by the girl he loves and loses his church.

Prominent in the support of Mr. Gaden and Miss Robinson are Miss Lucille Taft, Henry W. Pemberton, John Reinhard, Charles W. Travis, John Mackin and Alan Robinson. The cotton factory scenes were filmed at Anniston, Ga., and the great strike scenes were made in Jacksonville, Fla., with the city's mounted police playing an important part in the riot incidents.

IVAN ANNOUNCES TITLE OF MAY RELEASE.

"Her Husband's Wife" is the name of Ivan Abramson's brain child which will be released in May.

In the history of Filmland there is record of few photoplays with a theme treated in such a masterful manner as is the powerful drama now in course of production at the Ivan studios.

The cast is by far the most illustrious ever assembled under the Ivan banner, and "Her Husband's Wife" will embody the artistic efforts of such stars as Sally Crute, Mignon Anderson, Augustus Phillips, William Bechtel, Bradley Barker, Guido Colucci and others.

Director Abramson does not merely scratch the surface of his subject and reserve the body as a nucleus for a half dozen plays to follow. He is famous for his thorough treatment of theme and in the scenario of "Her Husband's Wife" there is no "walking" and no saving of "effects" for future use.

"Her Husband's Wife" will cause discussion in pulpit and press everywhere on the civilized globe, and it is safe to assume that it will get more genuine publicity than any photoplay yet produced.

NEW ESSANAY FEATURE UNDER WAY.

President George K. Spoor of Essanay has sent a troupe of players to Chattanooga, Tenn., to film a new feature play, "According to the Code," in the exact locality in which the author has laid his plot. The play, written by Charles Michelson, deals with a love story of the civil war and the meeting of the aged principals to-day—more than a half century afterward.

Lewis S. Stone, the famous stage star, who recently finished "The Havoc" for Essanay, will take the lead with Marguerite Clayton. E. H. Calvert will direct the piece and take the heavy lead. Sydney Ainsworth will take the other principal part, also a heavy.

The few interiors of the play will be taken in the Chicago studios upon the return of the players from the south. A dozen members of the stock company went to Tennessee from Chicago. Mr. Stone, who had been on a shooting trip in the Rocky Mountains following his work with Gladys Hanson and Bryant Washburn in "The Havoc," joined the party at Chattanooga.

The play requires the use of cavalry, which will be obtained in the south. It also requires a close adherence to type and settings which Mr. Spoor believed could not be better obtained than in the natural locality of the subject. The same country in which Director Calvert filmed the famous "Tish" series of Mary Roberts Rinehart will provide the locations for "According to the Code."

"According to the Code" is only one of the several strong features which Essanay will shortly offer. "Sherlock Holmes" with William Gillette, in seven [illegible] released. following [illegible]

"PURPLE SHADOWS" (Universal).

"Purple Shadows," the second of a series of underworld dramas being produced by Jacques Jaccard and featuring G. Raymond Nye, contains lights which should satisfy the most blase of thrill-seeking picture fans. The story proper deals with the Camorra, the powerful Italian Secret Society, and the producer claims that although the plot of the story is a myth, the details are facts.

The cast in addition to Nye, includes Roberta Wilson, Hector V. Sarno and Guglielmo De Rosa, the last two named being well known Italian actors; and judging from their work in this picture, will soon become the same in this country. Full of action, characterization and realism, "Purple Shadows" has already created a strong impression among those who have been fortunate enough to see it prior to its release.

"THE SNOWBIRD" WITH MABEL TALIAFERRO (Metro).

"The Snowbird," a five-part production in which Mabel Taliaferro is starred, and Edward Carewe, the director, is featured, Scene from "The Snowbird" (Metro).

now being produced by the Rolfo Photoplays, Inc., will be released on the Metro program May 8.

The story of "The Snowbird" is laid in the picturesque Hudson Bay district. A strong characterization of the primitive man is given by Edwin Carewe, who plays the part of Jean Corteau, and Miss Taliaferro has an exceptional role which gives her full opportunity to display her marvelous versatility. There is a strong supporting cast, including James Cruze, Warren Cook, Walter Hitchcock and Kitty Stevens.

"THE GILDED SPIDER" (Bluebird).

Louis Lovely is starred in this, her third, feature for Bluebird Photoplays. Lon Chaney, her leading man, is provided with a role that will permit him to divide the honors equally with Miss Lovely. Lule Warrenton is a third member of the cast who is sure to gain public acclaim for the excellency of her work as a character actress.

Ida May Park provided the scenario and Joseph De Grass, after extensive negotiations [illegible] features, made the production with railroad officials higher up Director Davis finally secured tion. In the supporting company Gilmore Hammond, Marjorie Ellison, Jay Belasco and Hayward Mack are provided with excellent roles, which lead them through a round of sensational scenes bound to stir enthusiasm among "picture fans" who like excitement with their entertainment.

There have been many novel themes provided to create these sensations, one particularly effective scene showing the private roof garden of a New York millionaire. As a climax to this scene, there is a sensational leap from the wall of the garden to the pavement below. Two kidnapping incidents, in one of which a girl jumps from a yacht into the waters of the Mediterranean to escape her captor, lend excitement. There is a wild "chase" in automobiles; a very sensational fight upon and under the docks in New York harbor, and two or three big "sets" in which a score of men and women do ball-room dancing.

The release date of "The Gilded Spider," on the Bluebird program, is May 8.

"THE CYCLE OF FATE" (Selig).

Marshal Neilan, the Selig actor and producer, is nothing if not versatile. He has probably broken all motion picture records in connection with "The Cycle of Fate," a Selig Red Seal play, released April 3rd, through V-L-S-E. Mr Neilan not only wrote the play and directed the production, but he also enacts an important role in this five-part drama.

"The Cycle of Fate" stars winsome Bessie Eyton for the first time in Selig V-L-S-E plays. Miss Eyton is supported by a carefully selected company of artists, including Al W. Filson, Edith Johnson, Edward J. Piel, Marion Warner and others.

The plot of "The Cycle of Fate" is an unusual one. Twins are born to a mother, who loses her husband at sea. Each of the little ones, a boy and a girl, carry a birthmark on their hands. The boy runs away to escape the iron rule of a stern grandfather, the girl remains at home. Years pass and the boy becomes a gun-man in a great city. His sister is tempted to elope with a man who brings her into her brother's environment. He recognizes the girl by the birthmark on her hand. He saves his sister and brings happiness to both at the risk of his life.

There is climax after climax in this trilling drama, there is beautiful photography and talented acting. "The Cycle of Fate," it is freely predicted, will prove as popular as those other Selig V-L-S-E plays, "The N'er-Do-Well," "Thou Shalt Not Covet," "The Rosary," etc., etc.

TO EXCHANGES AND EXHIBITORS.

W. L. Gross, claiming to be manager of the Princess Theater, Bristol, Conn., leased the "Great European War," a four-reel picture. Said Gross secured this film under false pretenses as he is in no way connected with the above mentioned concern.

No doubt this party will try to lease or dispose of this or other pictures and all exhibitors and exchangemen are hereby warned to keep clear.

Any party apprehending this party will confer a favor by notifying Rudy's War Film Co., care of Quality Film Service, Phone 1759 Bryant, Godfrey Bldg., 49th street and Seventh avenue, New York City.

DE HAVEN SCORES IN "KING FOR A MINUTE."

It is a long leap from Broadway to a throne, but Carter De Haven, popular comedian of the Universal Company, makes it in "King for a Minute," the production of which has just been completed by William J. Bowman, the well-known director, who made "Pennington's Choice," "The Silent Voice," "The Second in Command," and other photoplays in which Francis X. Bushman was featured.

OSCAR & CONRAD ELECTED TO FALSTAFFS.

The vogue of Falstaff comedy characters has forced a new order of things to the extent that some of the fun-makers simply must be made permanent. The fans demand it. Therefore Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish, as "Oscar and Conrad," will now be a fixture in Falstaff comedies. These two estimable gentlemen will engage in various lines of business, handling pickles or sky-scrapers with equal confidence. Lloyd Lonergan, their creator, will give the two comedians ample play for their versatility, and the pictures already finished show an entirely new angle of film comedy. Cooper and McNish are now in Jacksonville, Florida, where they will pick up enough material to lend variety to the settings of their work. After several weeks there they will return to New Rochelle for the summer'

"THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE" (American).

With water pouring in on them from the open conning tower trap the crew of the submarine 2-2 battle for their lives in the first chapter of "The Secret of the Submarine," the new chaptered film novel, which has its premier, through Mutual, May 8.

The production is by the American Film Co., Inc., and is being made at the naval bases of the Pacific coast through the co-operation of the United States Government. Thomas Chatterton and Juanita Hansen in the heroic leads are each required to display an unusual amount of daring, for their pictured path of life, judging by the first chapter, is to be a tumultuous one.

The story centers around the girl's life and a secret discovered by her father, Dr. Burke, whereby sufficient oxygen can be extracted from water to enable submarines to be navigated at great depth without risk to the crews.

the U. S. government, arrives to observe a practical test of the secret, the apparatus having been installed in an abandoned submarine by Dr. Burke. There are others, too, interested in the submarine secret, among them Satsuma, a Japanese spy. This part is played by William Tedmarsh, who established quite a reputation for character work in the role of Quabba in "The Diamond from the Sky."

Opens Strand, Hackettstown.

Hackettstown, N. J.—The Strand theater, Hackettstown, N. J., a 700-seat house, has been opened under the management of E. H. Burns, manager of the Monticello theater, Jersey City. The formal opening was on April 8. Mutual and V-L-S-E features form the program for the new house.

The Johnson Ordinance

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Concerned Over the New Proposed Regulation of Commissioner Johnson Regarding Space Allotted to Every Standing Patron in Theaters and Lobbies—Apprehension in Reading.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Overcrowded theater lobies and the number of persons permitted to stand in the rear of moving picture theaters, together with the manner of placing signs in theater entrances, is, according to Commissioner of Labor and Industry Jackson, a danger to the safety of the public at large that needs regulation.

A specimen ordinance regulating these practices has been prepared by the department and is being forwarded to every borough and city in the state of Pennsylvania with more than 1,000 population. Accompanying the ordinance is a request that cities and boroughs co-operate with the department by passing such legislation in the councils.

Included in the prepared regulations are theaters, opera houses, and other buildings used for the purpose of public assemblages, in addition to moving picture theaters. Penalties fixed in the ordinance vary from $25, for the first offense, to $50, or thirty days imprisonment, or both, for the second offense.

By the terms of the ordinance, every person standing behind the last row of seats would have at least three square feet of floor space and a five-foot passageway would always be maintained between the foyer wall and the standing space and an independent exit would be available for such standing space.

Notices would be posted setting forth the number of persons permitted to stand in the rear of the theater, and in no event would the number of persons standing be allowed to exceed 20 per cent. of the seating capacity of the main floor. No person would be allowed to stand in any aisle except the regular employes, nor to stand in any exits.

Reading, Pa.—Proprietors of moving picture theaters and other theatrical men of Reading, Pa., recently met in the office of Mayor Filbert where they received copies of the ordinance which Commissioner Jackson wants to have passed. The moving picture men declared that an ordinance so strict would force some of them from the field and it was decided to hold a conference in the near future to appoint a committee to visit Mr. Jackson and present their case to him.

MANY MISSED A FREE SHOW.

Mayor Smith Thought It Wrong to Open Ruby Theater on Sabbath.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Many moving picture enthusiasts were disappointed when the doors of the Ruby theater, Sixth and Market streets, failed to be thrown open to the public on Sunday afternoon, April 9. Notices had been placed in front of the theater announcing the fact that a free show would be given and that those who felt inclined to contribute anything in the way of remuneration could do so. Many children in the vicinity of the theater, having read the sign, gathered in front of the Ruby with the expectation of witnessing a wonderful moving picture exhibition free of any charge whatsoever.

However the announcement of the theater management that a show would be given on Sunday was followed by an announcement from Mayor Smith to the effect that it was very improper to open a theater on the Sabbath and, it is said, suggesting that the doors remain closed. The warning was given further weight by the presence of several officers of the law who stood nearby.

Administrative powers in this city are apparently extremely antagonistic toward any violation of the Sunday theater laws and any efforts along that line will more than likely meet with disastrous results, if the local authorities have anything to do with it. Director Wilson affirmed that positively there would be no moving picture theaters open in Philadelphia on Sundays as long as he was in office and further that any violations along this line will be punished with great severity.

However, moving picture interests in this city are not satisfied to abide by any such decisions and they are preparing to further test the law along this line. For many years past efforts have been made to conduct moving picture shows on Sunday and it has now come to the point where concentrated efforts will be made in the near future.

Baltimore Avenue Theater Sold.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Title to the moving picture theater, 5028-26 Baltimore avenue, was recently conveyed by Harry B. Hammond to Rose Keniw for a nominal sum and a mortgage of $27,664.

Friedman Film Incorporates.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Friedman Film Corporation has recently been granted a charter under the laws of the state of Delaware for the purpose of manufacturing all descriptions of films. The new concern has been capitalized at $50,000, John W. Neukom, E. A. Roberts and E. S. Forsell, all of Duluth, Minn., being the principle incorporators.

Clean-Up in Reading.

Reading, Pa.—At a meeting of moving picture exhibitors held in the Chamber of Commerce, Reading, Pa., it was decided to support the clean-up week movement by flashing slides on the screens in the various moving picture theaters. The clean-up will continue from April 17 to 22 and during that time it is hoped that the entire city will be made immaculate. Ben. H. Zerr, president of the Reading Local, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, spoke strongly in favor of helping the movement by allowing the use of the screens.

Local Business Notes.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Lewis M. Swaab, 1327 Vine street, announces having obtained the agency for Sanozone perfume throughout this section of the country. This perfume is one of the sweetest scented known in the theatrical industry and is used in many of the leading theaters, including the Keith circuit.

Bill to Provide for the Licensing of Operators Now Before the House of Representatives—Board of Examiners Provided For—Fee Set at $5—Fines and Penalties for Violations of the New Ordinance.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St. N. E., Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—New regulations for the licensing of motion picture operators in the District of Columbia are contemplated in a bill just introduced into the House of Representatives at the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by Congressman Johnson, of Kentucky. This measure provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to operate any cinematograph, moving picture machine or other similar apparatus in the District of Columbia without having first obtained a license.

The commissioners of the District of Columbia are to be empowered to appoint a board of examiners consisting of one employee of the electrical department, one employee of the office of the inspector of buildings, and one employee of the fire-prevention force of the fire department, to serve during the pleasure of the commissioners, and it is to be the duty of the board to examine all applicants for license to operate the machines referred to and to license each applicant who is found to be competent.

The commissioners are to promulgate rules and regulations under which the examinations are to be held. The examination is to be a practical one and for this purpose the board of examiners is to be authorized to purchase cinematographs, moving picture machines, or other similar apparatus, stationery, printing and office supplies at a cost not to exceed $300 in any one fiscal year, and the appropriation for the contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the District of Columbia is made available for such purchases which are to be made through the purchasing officer of the District of Columbia upon requisition made by the board.

Each person receiving a license is required to pay a fee of $5 to the collector of taxes. Any person violating the provision of the law if enacted is to be prosecuted upon information filed by the corporation counsel or one of his asistants in the name of the District of Columbia in the police court and upon conviction thereof be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100, and, in addition to such fine, the license of such convicted person shall be subject to revocation by the board of examiners after due notice and hearing accorded to the licensee.

It is further provided in the bill that the commissioners may promulgate from time to time such regulations as they may deem necessary for the operation of projection machines and similar apparatus not inconsistent with the provisions of the Johnson bill.

This bill, H. R. 14479, has been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia of which Congressman Johnson is the chairman.

Under the present regulations, applicants for licenses to operate motion picture films are required to demonstrate their fitness to the satisfaction of the chief engineer of the fire department. The commissioners have recommended that the bill be enacted into law. At present all that is required of an applicant is that he submit to a written examination.

EXCLUSIVE RIGHTS LAWFUL.

Federal Trade Commission So Rules—Exhibitor Had Complained.

Washington, D. C.—The refusal of a moving picture film distributing agency to serve other than one theater in a given territory, under ordinary cicumstances and where there is an absence of an intent to accomplish by this means an unlawful purpose, is not unlawful, as neither the Federal Trade Commission Act nor the Clayton Act prohibits a corporation dealing exclusively with one firm in a given territory, according to Conference Ruling No. 45, recently issued by the Federal Trade Commission.

The matter came before the Commission on an application for the issuance of a complaint by it against a motion picture distributing agency which, it was alleged, refused to supply the applicant with films on the ground that another exhibitor in the same city has been given the exclusive rights to exhibit the films of the distributing company.

The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction over such unlawful practices and unfair competition in interstate commerce.

Correcting An Error.

Frank B. Spurrier, manager of the local office of V-L-S-E, Inc., is much elated over the showing he was able to make recently as he had every one of the seventy-five or more features on hand working for either the whole or a part of the seven-day period. This in an exceptionally fine showing, as it represented a clean slate for the entire week.

THEATERS AND CHARITIES.

Show Managers Give Many Benefits—Much Expected of Them.

The motion picture houses of Washington have been and are continuing to accomplish a great deal of good for the benefit of the people of the city. One does not really realize the broad scope of their works of charity, but apparently there is hardly a benefit run in the city that does not include the sale of motion picture theater tickets. If the mothers' circle, or some other organization requires a sewing machine on which Susie may stitch shirts for soldiers, or the corner school would like to have a graphophone for its assembly hall; a lodge wants to start the building of a sick fund, or an entertainment fund, or some other sort of a fund, the first thing done is to appoint a committee to wait upon some prominent theater man and arrange for the sale of benefit tickets. This is usually done by letting the committee have a quantity of the regular admission tickets, to be paid for at half price after the committee has sold them. The good work is brought to mind at this time by the commencement of benefits for playgrounds for the use of the children during the summer months. Not only are there ticket sales, but special exhibitions are given the entire returns for which are turned in to the playground fund.

Co-operation of the theater managers is assured to the committee in charge of the "baby week" campaign in this city. Letters asking for the use of theaters for a free matinee for mothers were sent out by Harriet H. Locker, chairman of the publicity committee. The committee states that it will provide slides, films and physicians who will give instructive talks. The managers have also been requested to run slides each day attracting attention to the campaign. A fund of $3,000 is being raised to carry on the campaign.

Motion Picture Bowling Team.

Washington, D. C.—Considerable interest is being taken in the national tournament of the Atlantic Coast Bowling League in Washington. All of the well known concerns in the mercantile field of the city have been represented by teams. The honor of the motion picture industry is being upheld by the Moore aggregation. Tom Moore himself, as captain, made the highest score of his team. Charles W. Plunkett, manager of the Plaza, was not so very far behind, and both made fair scores in the single events into which they entered. The other members of the team were M. Brosnan, Leon Trudewind and Tom Michaud. They rolled up a score of 1,413 in ten pins. The individual scores of Messrs. Moore and Plunkett were 299 and 266 respectively, while in the singles they rolled 276 and 271 respectively.

"Nation" Film in Capital City.

Washington, D C.—A considerable hue and cry has arisen since the announcement that there would be shown at the New National theater the much talked of "Birth of a Nation." The District Commissioners have announced that they are without authority to prevent the exhibition of this feature. The opponents of the photoplay state that they will go to every extreme under the law in their efforts to stop it.

The commissioners had been asked to grant the opponents a hearing on the question, but their request was refused when the commissioners were informed by the corporation counsel that it was not in their power to bar the production from the city.

Chaplin's "Carmen" at Casino.

Washington, D. C.—Marcus Notes, of the Empress theater, has taken over the Casino theater, on F street, near Seventh street, Northwest, for a showing of Chaplin's "Carmen." He is making many alterations to the house, a description of which will appear in a futcre issue of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Notes has booked this production for fourteen days at a price said to set the record for so long a period. From the comments heard prior to the exhibition it is expected that another record will be made in the point of attendance.

W. A. Sells to Represent United in Raleigh.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust, proprietor of the United Film Service in this territory, has appointed W. A. Sells as his representative in Raleigh, N. C. Mr. Sells was formerly connected with the Park theater in that city and has had a wide experience in the motion picture business. He will be located at room 510, Citizens' National Bank building.

Local Triangle Film Offices.

Washington, D. C.—The Triangle Film Company has secured a location in Washington, having taken temporary quarters with C. J. Dexter, 414 Ninth street, Northwest. Mr. J. W. McIntyre will represent the company in this territory.

H. E. Friedman Gets the Check.

Washington, D. C.—H. E. Friedman, traveling representative of the local office of the World Film, is wearing the smile that won't fade. Some few months ago about fifty-nine salesmen of the company were required to enter a race, the prize in which was a nice big check. That check was offered to the man who could turn in the largest amount of business by April 1, and show the biggest increase during the six months ending on that day. Friend Henry did the trick, thanks, he says, to the exhibitor friends of his in this section. Clarence W. Bunn, manager of the local office, is considerably elated, his office having come out second in the contest affecting some twenty-six offices throughout the country. This is a very good showing in view of the fact that this territory is very small considering some of the other allotments.

Washington, D. C.—The Circle theater, on Pennsylvania avenue, Northwest, is to undergo a number of improvements, etc., to place it in first class shape for the summer season. It is reported that Dr. William P. Herbst has signed a contract for the installation of a model ventilating plant which will occupy a large portion of the upper floor of the theater building.

Virginia Notes of Interest.

Hampton, Va.—Captain Scott, of the Apollo theater, is reported to have taken over the American theater, in Phoebus, Va. This house is now being operated by C. T. Barker. It is said that when Captain Scott secures possession he will close the theater for a period of two months during which time he will remodel it, giving it much the same appearance as his fine looking house in Hampton. It will be up-to-date in every respect.

Lynchburg, Va.—The National theater, recently taken over by the Wells interests of Norfolk and Richmond, is to be run as a feature house.

Norfolk, Va.—The Wonderland theater, one of the oldest, best known and prettiest of the small theaters of Norfolk, Va., was recently closed down on account of the condition of business and dismantled, the fixtures being bought by the Hofheimer's. This house was burned out some months ago and was recently remodeled, but business did not keep up, as the trend seems to have been away from that part of Granby street.

Some Clever Advertising.

Norfolk, Va.—Harry Hofheimer, of the Strand theater, is utilizing a new scheme to attract attention to his lobby displays. He is having cartoons made of the subjects of features and while these are not always in keeping perhaps with the text of the production, they serve their purpose of drawing the crowds in front of the house. During a showing of "An Unpardonable Sin," the cartoon showed a negro coming out of a chickencoop with his hands around the neck of a chicken—a decidedly unpardonable sin in that section of the country where chicken life is conserved. In connection with "To Him That Hath," the cartoon showed three men at a table engrossed in a game of poker, one man holding a full house; and they know what that means in Norfolk. The drawings are in black and white.

Kum-Bak Theater Sold.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Kum-Bak theater, 731 East Ohio street, Northside, Pittsburgh, Pa., was sold recently by Charles Bennett to Albert Haigh, a well known business man of East Liberty. Mr. Bennett is continuing temporarily as manager. The new owner contemplates a general overhauling of the theater, improvements to include redecoration of exterior and interior and the installation of some new equipment.

PITTSBURGH NOTES.

Donora, Pa.—John Haffner, who recently purchased the Princess theater, McKean avenue, Donora, Pa., is making some very handsome improvements in the house, which is one of the largest and most up-to-date in the section. Contract has been let for a marquise to be built at once and an automatic ticket selling machine will be included in the new equipment. A motor generator is also being installed.

The resignation of R. H. Allen as general manager of the new Liberty theater, East End, Pittsburgh, takes effect April 15. He will be succeeded by J. W. Helm, who has been house manager since the opening of the theater three months ago.

Anti-Censorship Progress

Pittsburgh Screen Club's Big Fight Going Forward—Will Confer With Anti-Censorship Forces in Philadelphia and Make the Campaign State-Wide—Public Being Aroused—Newspapers Helping.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The movement against censorship in Pennsylvania, which has been launched and carried forward in such fearless manner by the Pittsburgh Screen Club, is gaining momentum steadily. The latest important step is the sending of John McAleer, chairman of the campaign committee of the club, to New York City, where he is interviewing the leading producers with a view to securing their co-operation in the campaign. That this effort to save the moving picture industry in the Keystone State from the disastrous results of censorship is fraught with much importance to the manufacturer goes without saying.

The campaign committee is doing efficient work and it is argued that, with the proper financial and moral support, public opinion can be aroused to such an extent that the repeal of the obnoxious law now in force will take place at the next session of the legislature. The moving picture forces in western Pennsylvania seem determined to do their part to achieve this end, and the greatest effort is now being directed toward making the campaign state wide. Mr. McAleer will probably remain in New York City for ten days. On his return trip he plans to stop at Philadelphia to confer on the anti-censorship movement with the film men of that city.

A phase of the present agitation against censorship that is particularly gratifying is the decided stand taken by the Pittsburgh daily papers on the question. Practically all of the papers have denounced the existing censorship law as unnecessary and unjust. In supporting the campaign committee of the Screen Club, the Pittsburgh "Leader" has agreed to donate 25,000 copies of the paper each Tuesday, for distribution at the various moving picture theaters throughout this section. In this edition each week a full page will be devoted to stories on censorship and arguments against it. The information thus imparted will go far toward educating the public as to the evils of the censorship law as laid down in Pennsylvania.

CAMERAPHONE IMPROVEMENTS.
New Policy and Higher Prices to Follow Reopening of Theater.

East Liberty, Pa.—The East Liberty Cameraphone theater, 6202 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been closed for extensive alterations and improvements which will be made at a cost of about $12,000. The changes will embody a number of new ideas in theater arrangement and are expected to make the Cameraphone one of the most attractive houses in that section of the city. An elaborate stage effect and scenic surroundings are being installed, and the pipe organ is to be rebuilt and greatly enlarged.

The transformation in the physical appearance of the theater will be accompanied by a number of changes in policy, among which will be an advance in admission price, ranging from 20 to 50 cents, depending upon the attraction. Manager H. B. Kester recently returned from Chicago, Indianapolis, Detroit and other cities where he inspected the best theaters with a view to introducing the most advanced features into his theater. Mr. Kester is president of the Screen Club. A big reopening of the Cameraphone will be held in the near future.

W. J. Marrion Takes Charge.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—W. J. Marrion was recently appointed manager of the Cameraphone theater, 1600 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., and has taken charge there. Mr. Marrion was formerly manager of the Quality theater, Fifth avenue, and, being an experienced man in both the exhibiting and film end of the business, his continued success is assured.

Doris Theater's Special Shows.

Wilkinsburg, Pa.—Among those in the Pittsburgh territory achieving big success with special shows for children is Manager J. W. Hunter, of the Doris theater, Wilkinsburg. Mr. Hunter has inaugurated a Children's Day, which is advertised for every Wednesday. Recently his attendance reached a new high mark when he ran "The Wizard of Oz," the crowds at every showing being so large that they could not be handled by the ushers and the aid of police was necessary. The programs for Childrens' Day have been arranged by Mr. Hunter with particular care, and this accounts largely for his unusual success. The pictures already shown were "Alice in Wonderland," "Rip Van Winkle," "The Magic Toymaker" and Goldie Locks and the Three Bears."

New Theater in Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—M. Letzelter, a prominent wholesale liquor dealer of Bloodfield, is preparing to erect a large moving picture theater at Liberty avenue and Matilda street, Pittsburgh, Pa. The building, which is to cost in the neighborhood of $40,000, will be of fireproof construction and modern in every respect. The seating capacity of the house will be 1,000. Architect Harry Blair is now completing the plans. According to present arrangements ground will be broken within the next week or ten days and it is expected that the theater will be completed and ready for opening about the middle of August. Walter Artzberger, proprietor of the new Penn theater, at Penn avenue and Butler street, has closed a contract with Mr. Letzelter whereby he secures a lease on the house. Mr. Artzberger has negotiations under way for two other theaters in the city.

J. R. Lindhardt Buys Theater.

Sharpsburgh, Pa.—The Comfort theater, at 602 Main street, Sharpsburgh, Pa., has been sold by Louis Rech to J. R. Lindhardt, of Wilkinsburg. The name of the theater, the Comfort, is quite appropriate, as this house is a very attractive and cosy one seating 322 people. Located in this thriving industrial suburb of Pittsburgh, the Comfort does a profitable business at all times.

Columbia Theater Company Extending.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Columbia Theater Company, which has recently taken over the Columbia theater, on Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., will apply on April 24 for a state charter of incorporation to operate moving picture theaters and other places of amusement. The applicants are Thomas D. McCloskey, William E. Best and Robert N. Grier, all of this city.

Local 171 Takes Bigger Offices.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The thriving Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union No. 171 has leased larger offices at 226 Diamond street, above the Idle Hour theater. The change is made necessary by increased volume of business that has resulted from the steady growth in the local's membership. The assembly rooms will remain in the Century building, where more space is now afforded for the regular meetings.

Many New Members

Buffalo Screen Club Elects Many Worth While Members—Coming Film Ball to Be Most Splendid Affair—Thanhouser Stars Booked to Be Present—Many Others Expected to Accept.

By Joseph McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Building, Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y., April 12.—The following have been elected to membership in the Buffalo Screen Club: Michael Shea, Shea's Hippodrome; Ira Mosher, Palace theater; J. A. Schuchert, Elmwood theater; G. K. Rudulph, Buffalo Enquirer; I. Moses, Shea's Hippodrome; John F. Miller, Buffalo Times; John Pferd, Pastime theater; J. S. Savage, Como theater; C. R. Higgins, Colonial theater; C. N. Johnston, Ellen Terry theater; G. C. Hall, and George Hanny, Jr., Maxine theater; M. Whitman, Waterson, Berlin & Snyder Publishing Co.; G. C. Stockton, Elmwood theater; G. A. Keating, Jubilee theater; William Leyser, Jr., Rialto theater; Edward Hyman, New Victoria theater; E. S. Davis, Keith's theater. The first nonresident to join the club was W. R. Wood of Rochester, representative of the Victor Film Service.

The Coming Ball.

A band of thirty pieces led by John Boldt and an orchestra led by Herman Schultz will furnish music at the Buffalo Screen Club's ball at the Elmwood Music Hall May 15th. The club will be elaborately decorated in gold and white, with the club's emblem prominently featured. The Thanhouser corporation, it is expected, will send Florence La Badie, Frederick Ward and Gladys Hulette to the ball. Word from other producers, who will furnish stars, is expected at an early date. The screen club visited the Elks' fashion show Tuesday evening and advertised the ball extensively.

The Friars' Club may visit the screen club's quarters at an early date. The itinerary of the Friars' frolic is likely to include Buffalo. Representatives of the club will meet the friars at their train and escort them to their theater. The formal opening of the clubrooms will take place on the evening of May 1, when the members and their wives will be entertained. Various amusement features are being added to the quarters.

The Prince of Optimists.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The accompanying picture is that of Lou Green, traveling representative of the Buffalo branch of the World Film. Mr. Green is known as "the prince of optimists" among film men, as his photograph would indicate. The picture shows Mr. Green's face radiant with joy just after he had landed an important contract for the World service. He is an active member of the entertainment committee of the Buffalo Screen Club. He has been selling feature films throughout New York state for two years and is favorably known among the exhibitors in and out of Buffalo. He has represented the World Corporation for one year and has landed many contracts.

Lou Green.

J. L. Muhlhauser, manager of the Buffalo branch of the World Film Corporation, called a meeting of his road representatives recently. He outlined to them the national advertising campaign which his company will begin May 6.

Weather Flags on Family Theater.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Manager Franklin is displaying flag signals of the Buffalo weather bureau on the roof pole of the Family theater. A bulletin at the door also carries full weather predictions as issued from the office of the local weather forecaster. Free coupons have been distributed by Mr. Franklin at several local cigar stores. Each coupon will be accepted for five cents on a ten cent ticket to that theater.

"By the use of these coupons," said Mr. Franklin, "many Buffalonians will have an opportunity to become acquainted with the Family program of a great feature every day, with three other features, at the prettiest theater in the city, located in the heart of Buffalo."

S. S. Webster Goes to Cleveland.

Buffalo, N. Y.—S. S. Webster of Buffalo has joined the Universal forces at Cleveland under George W. Erdmann, manager, formerly of Buffalo. Mr. Webster at one time managed the All Theaters Film Co. of this city. He has also managed theaters here. He has had twelve years' experience in the moving picture business and is favorably known among film men and exhibitors throughout the country.

Solos at Strand Theater.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The plan of having individual members of the orchestra of the Strand moving picture theater, Buffalo, take their turns at playing solos on the stage of that house is proving a success. Each player is a trained musician and is able to show his particular skill before the Strand patrons. George Bouchard is director of the orchestra. Harold Eidel is managing director of the Strand and J. W. Bengough is house manager. They are introducing novel advertising in the form of attractive calendars on which the list of coming attractions at the Strand appear. These useful calendars are distributed only among the business houses of the city. The printing and engraving of the calendars are in keeping with the high standard that marks all the advertising features of the Strand.

J. E. Willis Heads Local Triangle.

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. E. Willis has been appointed manager of the Buffalo branch of the Triangle Film Corporation. Mr. Willis is one of the oldest men, in point of service, in the distributing end of the moving picture business. The large number of exhibitors now using Triangle films indicates their popularity with Buffalo theatergoers.

Boy Twins Come to Manager Vallelly.

Took Class to See Big Studio.

Cleveland, O.—As a practical part of the training of students of the Case School of Applied Science, Prof. F. H. Vose recently took fifty mechanical engineering students to Brooklyn to visit the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn. The entire process of picture making was explained to the students. This is the second trip Prof. Vose has arranged to give his pupils an insight into picture making.

Cleveland, O.—Beginning April 9, crowds have filled the Euclid Avenue Opera House to see the war film "On the Firing Line with Germany," brought here by the Cleveland News. The 8,000 feet of film was taken by Wilbur H. Durborough, noted newspaper photographer. The pictures are unusually clear and are full of remarkable action. The films were shown twice a day until April 17.

MIDLAND FILM MFG. CO.

New Cleveland Producer to Build Studio

Herbert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND, O.—Still another Cleveland film company has entered the field. It is to be capitalized at $500,000 and J. A. Fitzgerald, formerly with the World Film Corporation, will be managing director. The company will be known as the Midland Film Manufacturing Company and proposes to build a monster outdoor studio, to be known as Midland City, in one of the suburbs of Cleveland. The company has opened offices at 452 Leader-News building.

COOLLY PLAYED THE PIANO.

Mrs. C. A. Megown Prevents Panic in Her Husband's Theater.

Cleveland, O.—Mrs. C. A. Megown, piano player at the Camerphone theater, Euclid avenue and East 8th street, and wife of the proprietor, was the heroine of a fire which damaged the Permanent building, in which the theater is located, a few days ago.

When smoke commenced to fill the theater, Mrs. Megown quietly closed doors near the screen to keep out the smoke and then as calmly asked patrons to file out quietly. While they filed out, Mrs. Megown played popular airs on the piano.

Miss Ella Schaffer, ticket seller at the Cameraphone, also remained in the ticket office and refunded their money to all patrons who asked it. The house was emptied without disorder. The theater was not damaged, but firemen fought several hours to prevent a spread of the blaze, which had originated in the basement in another part of the building.

Manager Beck to House New Theater.

Cleveland, O.—Manager Beck of the Mall theater, Superior avenue, has just filed an application with the city building department for the building of a new theater, to cost more than $50,000. It will be located in a court between Euclid and Superior avenues, and will have entrances from both avenues. Mr. Beck's present business has outgrown the theater he now occupies.

Jack Greenbaum's Patrons Are Censors.

Cleveland, O.—Jack Greenbaum, manager of the Alhambra theater, believes he has solved the program question by asking a personal board of censors composed of patrons of his house and newspaper men to view and pass upon films he plans to book before they are run publicly. These critics, Mr. Greenbaum says, will be asked to state the reasons why the films in question should be booked or rejected.

"We think we will get an excellent idea of what the public wants in this way," Mr. Greenbaum says. "The critics we invite to help us will not be confined to any one group of persons, but will be from all ranks, business and professional men, club women, preachers and newspaper [illegible]."

"A Beehive of Industry."

Cleveland, O.—Motion pictures prepared under the supervision of the Ohio State Board of Commerce were recently shown to members of the City Club at a noon luncheon. The films were made to show the wide range of industrial activity represented in Ohio. They were entitled "A Beehive of Industry."

L. H. Wilk Gets Crown Theater.

Cleveland, O.—It was announced here this week that L. H. Wilk has purchased all the stock of the Crown Amusement Company and will manage the Crown theater, Kempton avenue and East 105th street. The stock was held by S. E. Morris.

Special Children's Matinees.

Three suburban houses, the Wind-a-meer in East Cleveland, the Alhambra and Lakewood theaters, have been holding special childrens' matinees during the Lenten school vacation. The Wind-a-meer has been showing "Rumpelstiltskin," the Alhambra has been featuring "The Little Shepherd" and "Golden Locks and the Three Bears." The Alhambra showed the first Metro-Drew comedy, "The Count of Ten" and Mabel Taliaferro in "Her Great Price."

Asked to Respect Anthem.

The Celevalnd Chamber of Commerce has just sent letters to the managers of all theaters and all orchestra leaders asking them to prohibit the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" as any part of a medley and also asking that theater heads request their audiences to stand when national airs are played.

Wedding Bells in Bellefontaine.

Bellefontaine, O.—The marriage of Miss Freda Haines, society favorite and talented musician, to S. W. Hatch, manager of the General Film Company of St. Louis, is scheduled for the early part of April. The couple became engaged when Mr. Hatch was located in Columbus. Miss Haines is a graduate of the Cincinnati College of Music and has done concert work.

"The Moving Picture Leader."

The Cleveland Leader has just commenced the publication of a Sunday supplement called "The Moving Picture Leader," which is devoted entirely to news of photo plays and players.

After all, there is only one moving picture paper that you really need, and this is IT, conducted by the largest and most experienced staff of editors and correspondents.

Actors' Fund in Detroit.

John H. Kunsky, of Detroit, has been appointed active chairman of the Detroit committee to raise money towards the $500,000 home for destitute actors and moving picture people on Staten Island, N. Y. Mayor Oscar B. Marx has been appointed honorary chairman. While no details as to how the campaign will be conducted here have been determined, according to George W. Trendle, secretary to Mr. Kunsky, it is probable that there will be benefit shows in Mr. Kunsky's various theaters.

Serial Films in Neighborhood Houses.

Frank Mellon, manager of the Norwood theater, Detroit, believes in the future of serial films and says they are coming back stronger than ever. "They are very good for neighborhood theaters," he remarked. "Especially if they have prominent stars and can get the newspapers to co-operate on the story. We are doing splendidly with the 'Mary Page' serial. By the way, a few nights ago Mr. Mellon was notified—about 15 minutes before the starting of his first show—that his operator had been hurt and would be unable to come. It was too late to get someone else, so Mr. Mellon jumped in and did the operator's work. Moral is: Every theater manager should know projection thoroughly so as to be ready for any emergency.

Charles McVicker, of the Rosedale theater, Detroit, is another manager who believes in serials, if not too sensational. He prefers the continuous story instead of a complete story each time. He says where the story is continuous there is always suspense and people will come every week so as not to miss any of the story; the magazine and newspapers are also a great help to serials.

Henry Guthard Honored

Screen Club of Michigan Gives Banquet to Champion of Freedom of the Screen —Saved Detroit from Municipal Censorship—Committee to Arrange for Screen Ball in Detroit.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The Screen Club of Michigan tendered an elaborate banquet to Henry Guthard at the Hotel Pontchartrain Friday evening, April 7, in honor of the splendid work which he did to keep Detroit free from municipal censorship. Mr. Guthard is associated with the Majestic, Fine Arts and Norwood theaters, as well as the Metro Film Corporation, in Detroit, and it was largely through his efforts and influence that the $3,500 item for local censorship was chopped off by the Board of Estimates. About 20 of the leading film exchange managers and invited guests were present and the affair proved to be thoroughly interesting, entertaining and enjoyable. The banquet was given in one of the private dining rooms on the convention hall floor. The room was attractively decorated with flowers and palms. There was one long table which accommodated the entire party. During the serving of the dinner—through the kindness and courtesy of Harry I. Garson (Broadway-Strand theater)—there was some fine entertainment, including the Broadway-Strand vocalists, a pianist and several women singers. This was an unexpected treat.

Following the dinner, A. J. Gillingham, president of the Club, explained the purpose of the gathering and introduced Mr. Guthard, who modestly responded, saying that his efforts towards the elimination of censorship were not selfish, but for the good of the industry in general. He thanked the club for the tribute paid him and assured the members that as an exchange man he was ready at all times to co-operate with them in anything that would tend to improve conditions. The duties of toastmaster were thrust upon Harry I. Garson, who proved versatile in that capacity. He called upon most of those present for a few remarks.

Dollar a Seat—Unpadded Features.

Mr. Franconi, manager of the Pathe Exchange, said the large theater was here to stay—and that it was something he forecasted many years ago. "Big features will always be with us in this industry," he added. "We will see them seven, eight and ten reels, and they will be very successful if they are not padded and stretched out. The day is coming when it will not be uncommon for theaters in every city to charge as high as one dollar for motion pictures—most they will have to be real productions." Mr. Franconi has been in the business almost from its inception; has traveled in all parts of the world and says that the next twelve months will see some radical changes. He was strong in emphasizing the fact that there are too many productions and that the manufacturers would be doing a wise thing if they made fewer pictures—and made them better.

Paul Mooney, of Cleveland; A. J. Gilligham, George Weeks, of the Universal; G. H. Trask, of the Mutual; Fred Grennell, publicity representative, and Jacob Smith, of the Moving Picture World, were others who discussed various phases of the moving picture industry.

Screen Ball Coming.

There was considerable discussion regarding a screen ball to be given during the next sixty days. Every one present favored such an affair, and a special committee was appointed to work out the details. It is likely that the affair will be given at one of the leading downtown hotels the early part of May and that a number of screen stars of national prominence will be in attendance.

Miles-Detroit Co. Report.

Detroit, Mich.—Very satisfactory reports were submitted at the annual meeting of the Miles-Detroit Theater Co., Wednesday morning, April 12. Business was declared excellent and the concern in flourishing condition generally. The cash on hand up to April 2 totaled $24,254 and the surplus of assets over liabilities is given at close to $200,000. Already $16,000 is available for the next dividend, which is not due until July. All of the former officers and directors were re-elected. E. W. Voigt is president; S. X. Goldberg, vice-president; Dr. Paul C. Dulitz, secretary and treasurer.

A Theater to Be Proud Of.

Jackson, Mich.—Wirt S. McLaren, secretary and treasurer of the company operating the Majestic and Colonial theaters in Jackson, writes our Detroit office that "We are rather proud of the Majestic, which represents over $75,000 investment. We are using Big Four three days, Fox two days and World two days, and have played such attractoins as 'Birth of a Nation,' 'Battle Cry of Peace' and other big attractions. We have both of the above pictures booked for return engagements. We had a Fashion Show the last week in March that was very successful; it was the same show that appeared at the Washington and Alhambra theaters, Detroit."

New House in Pontiac.

Pontiac, Mich.—The Oakland Theater Company of Detroit, which will erect a new theater here, has purchased the site on Water street formerly occupied by the Wenonah hotel.

Tennessee Sunday Laws

Legislation Is Now Only Resource of Exhibitors in This State—"Ouster" Law Will Act Unless Officials Enforce Strict Sabbath Closing—W. E. Wilkerson Talks Interestingly on the Situation.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—Lovers of moving pictures will no longer be allowed to enjoy this innocent amusement on Sunday since the recent decision of the State Supreme Court declaring the operation on the Sabbath a nuisance. Probably no recent decision of the Tennessee courts has created more interest or caused more comment. Many plans to evade the decree have been presented to the local exhibitors, but under the advice of legal lights the theaters will be kept closed on Sundays until such time as relief may be obtained by legislative enactment.

The working people of the city and entire state are especially hostile to the application of the nuisance law to the moving picture shows, and it is understood that the labor unions are preparing to take steps whereby a campaign may be inaugurated to force the repeal of the law hindering innocent Sunday amusements.

W. E. Wilkerson, attorney and one of the stockholders of the Signal Mountain Amusement Company, operators of a string of Chattanooga theaters, has given much study to the Sunday-closing law, and has advised his directors that no relief can be expected until the 1917 session of the Legislature.

Mr. Wilkerson states that the laws quoted as a basis for the decison of the Supreme Court hark back to the period of fanaticism and barbarism when a person could be hanged for stealing a loaf of bread. In a recent interview Mr. Wilkerson said:

W. E. Wilkerson on the Situation.

"The people as a whole are chafing under the restraint that seems to place a ban upon Sunday amusements and recently emphasized by the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee in the Graham case. It is not the lawless element that is complaining, but the best people in the community, church communicants as well as others. These embrace the best people socially, religiously and financially. Usually where there is a law there is a way to get around it, and many suggestions have been made to disinterested parties looking to some arrangement by which there may be afforded some innocent way for amusement on Sunday, especially in the form of Sunday picture shows.

"The managements of picture houses have had pointed out to them the manner in which the people of Philadelphia evaded the blue laws. Under the old blue laws of Pennsylvania the public was prevented from attending Sunday concerts. There was a great floral show at Convention Hall and it was the greatest desire that the public should have an opportunity to see the exhibitions of florists, gathered from all parts of the country. The officials said that this could not be done. The management of the floral exhibits devised a scheme by which badges were sold and all who wore badges were admitted to the Sunday exhibit. The president of the Philadelphia Sabbath Association protested, but the public and the officials smiled and the exhibit was not interfered with.

"It has been further suggested that the owners of the local picture houses issue certificates of stock, say for $5 each, the stockholders to have the privilege of coming to the shows free of charge on Sunday. It is argued that there could be no objection to a meeting of the stockholders on Sunday, no others to be permitted to attend the meetings, and having themselves entertained while at the meeting with a picture show. Other methods have also been suggested.

Ways of Getting Around Laws.

"The people have different ways by which they rid themselves of undesirable laws, statutory or common. For instance they simply forget the law; it is lulled to sleep. Or they will enact a law abrogating the objectionable regulations, or, in acute cases, they will flagrantly disregard the law, taking it into their own hands, resulting in what is known as mobs. There are always a few men and women in every community who are impotent to enjoy life in any form. They are minus red corpuscles, they are envious of those who can enjoy life and recreation. And the last Legislature of Tennessee passed an ouster law.

"This law permits ten citizens to file a bill or take other legal steps, to oust an official from office because of his failure to enforce the law as they understand it to be. This can be done even without the sanction of the state officials, if cost bond is given. This makes it difficult to wink at the law, or to forget it, or allow it to go to sleep. Now it is very unpleasant and expensive for an official to defend himself in an ouster proceeding. This makes it an easy matter to revive the blue laws. This ouster law is thought by many to be undemocratic, tyrannical and an outrage on free government.

"The result is that officials are compelled to 'sit up and take notice.' It is also very expensive and unpleasant for officials of moving picture shows and operators to be arrested and arraigned before the courts. The result of this is that the public officials and exhibitors are forced to disregard the public sentiment.

Only Relief in Legislative Action.

"The devices that have been suggested smack of evasions and, in all events, a hazard is taken when picture shows are operated on Sunday that in all probability expensive and irksome litigation will follow. For these reasons no conclusion has been reached looking to an attempt to operate motion picture shows on Sunday. The probability is that relief will be sought by Legislative enactment at the earliest occasion.

What Is a Nuisance?

"The Supreme Court of Tennessee based its decision chiefly on the common law. This harks back to a time when men were put to death for stealing food when hungry.

"Under the old common law there were hundreds of offenses that were punishable by death. Blakstone defines a nuisance as anything that 'worketh hurt, inconvenience or damage.' In construing the meaning of this the courts have held that Sabbath breaking, which is a nuisance, tends to debauch the public morals, etc. Of course it is difficult to see how a moving picture show could debauch the public morals, or how it could be a nuisance. That is to say, the general public view is in this light. There are a few who yet believe that a man was made for the Sabbath, although the Highest Authority on moral questions once said, when accused of breaking the Sabbath, 'the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath.'

"However, in due time it may be safely said that these jarring conflicts will work out an equilibrium.

"So far as the owners of the moving picture shows are concerned, of course, there can be no profit derived from operating picture shows on Sundays for benefits; not from a financial standpoint. The profits are given for religious and benevolent causes. It is true that service first is a prime object of public amusement enterprises; incidentally money is made. It is a great pleasure to see thousands of people each Sunday enjoy themselves by seeing wholesome, instructive and entertaining motion picture shows. It is a diversion to those who are entertained. They are enabled to 'laugh and forget it.' Many have no other day on which they can enjoy themselves.

"The conclusion is that in all probability motion picture shows on Sundays in Tennessee will not be seen until the people, through their representatives, enact laws that will authorize Sunday exhibitions.

New Dyersburg Theater.

Dyersburg, Tenn.—Ellis X Wickersham, an architect of Mayfield, Ky., is preparing plans for a new theater along lines of the new Princess at Mayfield. The building will be of steel, concrete and brick.

Helen Holmes Visits.

Nashville, Tenn.—Helen Holmes, the daring railroad serial actress, was a recent visitor in Nashville, where she stopped off while on her way to Chicago from Florida.

Free Shows Again.

Nashville, Tenn.—A number of improvements have been made in the public parks of Nashville, and from general indications the big free moving picture show will be continued again this summer. Thousands of people took advantage of the free shows during the hot weather last summer, but so much rainy weather was encountered that many entertainments had to be postponed.

Children's Shows in Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn.—The first of the children's Saturday morning moving picture shows at Majestic No. 2, Memphis, proved an excellent attraction. The house was well filled with children and parents and the company will endeavor to improve the shows, which will be permanent.

LOUISVILLE COMMITTEES STUDYING PICTURE SHOWS.

Parent-Teacher Associations Are Preparing to Take More Active Interest in Films.

G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent
1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Picture show committees of twenty-six parent-teacher associations, of Louisville, were instructed following a meeting of fifteen representatives of such organizations, composing the Central Committee of the league, to write letters to film manufacturers urging that more pictures suitable for children be produced. A resolution was also adopted calling upon the public to write such letters to the producing companies.

The picture show committees were also instructed to familiarize themselves with ventilating and lighting systems in their various neighborhoods and to co-operate with the managements of the picture houses for better conditions. According to a leading member of the organization there is no necessity for extremely dark houses, as many of the managers have found out. Houses may be lighted and still show good pictures. Groping around is not necessary. It was stated that the organization was not endeavoring to dictate in any way to exhibitors, but was endeavoring merely to improve conditions.

BEN ALI RE-OPENS.

Manager Scott Makes Burned Theater as Beautiful as Before.

Lexington, Ky.—The Ben Ali theater, which was badly injured by fire several months ago, has been completely remodeled from pit to gallery, and was reopened on Monday, April 10, with "The Battle Cry of Peace." Manager Charles Scott made a trip to Cincinnati where he secured a number of good films to be shown at the theater. A ten-piece orchestra has been employed.

The house has been remodeled exactly as it was before the fire, when it occasioned a great deal of comment on its beauty. New tapestries, hangings, upholstery, etc., have been installed throughout. C. H. Berryman, president and general manager of the company, has announced that the Opera House, which ran pictures while the Ben Ali was closed down, will continue running pictures. The first of the Kentucky spring racing is about to start, and all of the theaters will be busy for a while.

New House in Middleboro.

Middleboro, Ky.—Brown & Sons, who own and operate two picture theaters here, have purchased a lot on Cumberland avenue, in the main business district, and are preparing to erect a $15,000 modern moving picture theater.

Strand and Operators Settle.

Louisville, Ky.—A disagreement between the management of the Strand theater and Operators' Union, Louisville Branch No. 163, concerning employment of union operators, has been satisfactorily settled according to a statement issued by Edward Clay, business manager of the union. Sigmund Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Trainmen, and John Schneider, secretary of the Building Trades Council, effected the settlement after a discussion with the management of the theater. Hereafter the Strand will employ two union operators, making the house union throughout, as the musicians and all other employees are union men. For two or more weeks pickets did duty near the house and distributed cards.

The Boone Way Enlarged.

Mt. Vernon, Ky.—George Owens, proprietor of the Boone Way opera house, Mt. Vernon, Ky., has increased his seating capacity about 25 per cent. and made a number of changes. The exits and entrances have been rearranged and the operating booth has been placed in a special room which has been built onto the front of the building.

Wreck of a Boat Theater.

Newport, Ky.—The theater boat New Idea, a floating moving picture vessel, which visits many of the river towns and villages along the Ohio and tributary rivers, recently struck a bridge pier here and sank in several feet of water. There were five men and one woman on board the boat at the time of the accident. These people were all rescued by a power barge. The boat was owned by Harry Hart, Sr., of Pittsburgh, Pa., who was en route to Louisville. The boat and apparatus is valued at about $13,000. It will be raised at once.

Benefit for Knights Templar Music.

Louisville, Ky.—The Walnut theater, of the Broadway chain in Louisville, operated a special benefit performance on two afternoons and nights, April 11 and 12, for the purpose of raising funds for the DeMolay Drum and Trumpet Corps, of DeMolay Commandery, Knights Templar. The feature of the program was a vocal solo by Mrs. Pansy DeNunzio.

Cincinnati Enthusiastic Over Chaplin "Carmen"

Charles Weigel Makes a Decided Hit with the Film at the Grand—"Ne'er-Do-Well" Another Trump Card with Patrons.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Special Correspondent, 610 1st. Nat. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—Charles Weigel, managing director of the Alhambra Theater Co., by signing up and handling at the Grand opera house two of the biggest things in recent films, is putting himself in the limelight as a really daring exhibitor, and, incidentally, is reaping a golden harvest thereby. The first of the two films referred to is Charlie Chaplin's burlesque of "Carmen," Essanay.

Mr. Weigel obtained control of the Grand, with its seating capacity of 1,600, for a two-weeks' run of this film, beginning Sunday, April 9, and from the start the picture was literally a howling success. Up to this writing Mr. Weigle reports every seat in the house taken for every one of the six daily performances. The admission charge all over the house was 25 cents, except the gallery, which was reserved for children at 10 cents. The success of the film at the Grand was in the nature of a foregone conclusion, but the arrangements entered into by the Alhambra management to handle the Chaplin burlesque there for two weeks succeeding the Grand run took some nerve.

The second run in Cincinnati was open to the biggest exhibitors in the city, and Mr. Weigel again won out. The figures are confidential, but it can be stated that they are offered for a second run, and in a relatively small house like the Alhambra. Mr. Weigel did not stop there, however, having completed a deal with the V-L-S-E office here to handle the big Selig feature, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," for two weeks at the Grand also. When these several runs are completed indications are that the game Alhambra man will be ready for a vacation, and also that he will have all the money in Cincinnati with which to pay for it.

NEW EXCHANGE OPENS.

Standard Film Service Company to Deal in State Rights.

Cincinnati, O.—Frank W. Huss and his associates in the moving picture business, including Edwin P. Bernardi, manager of the Colonial and vice-president of the National Theater Co., controlling that house; Thomas A. Reilly, president of the same company, and others, have entered the distributing end, recently incorporating the Standard Film Service Co., with a nominal capital stock of $1,000. The company plans to handle feature films, principally on the state rights basis, although it will not overlook the chance to pick up good films under satisfactory arrangements of any sort. It will not confine its operations exclusively to Ohio, as it has already secured the Kentucky rights to "Forbidden Fruit," which recently had a highly successful Cincinnati run.

A CINCINNATI SCREEN CLUB.

Plans Are Still Nebulous, But It Is Coming.

A Cincinnati Screen Club, which will welcome to membership all local men interested in moving picture work in any capacity, is in process of organization by some leading spirits in both the film and exhibition ends of the business here, with excellent prospects for a flying start. Plans are still somewhet nebulous, but it can be announced that a meeting will be held very shortly which will be attended by leading film men, some of the livest exhibitors in Cincinnati, and by newspaper and other writers interested in the film business, and at this meeting steps will be taken to form a permanent organization. It is emphasized by those planning the organization that it will not be partisan in any sense, but will have as its sole object the work of forwarding moving picture interests in Cincinnati. Enthusiastic support is pledged by many men already, assuring the success of the club.

ILLINOIS NEWS LETTER.

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent, 6747 Merced Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Springfield Operators Get a Raise.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—A new working agreement has been signed between all but one of the managers of Springfield motion picture houses and the members of operators' local No. 23. The operators get an increase of $1.50 a week.

Illinois Theater Changes.

Macomb, Ill.—The Tokyo theater is the new name of the Gem which now is under the management of J. W. Boyer.

Moline, Ill.—George Diehl, owner of the Mirror theater, has opened the Orpheum theater on Fourth avenue between First and Second streets. It seats 630, has two machines and is equipped with a Wurlitzer automatic orchestra.

Galesburg, Ill.—James O'Connor has purchased the Gaiety theater building.

Illinois Exhibitors and Ideas.

Lincoln, Ill.—The Star theater and Lincoln merchants will give away a Shetland pony in a voting contest.

Madison, Ill.—The Madison theater suspends its free list on Monday and Thursday nights when Triangle pictures are shown. These have been started at a straight ten cent admission.

Pekin, Ill.—"The Iron Strain" had to visit Pekin again before the patrons of the Court were satisfied. "Peggy," another Triangle film, is booked to return.

Carbondale, Ill.—Dairying in Southern Illinois was promoted here at a big meeting and a big parade. The Selig company had a cameraman who made several reels and the Illinois Central Railroad also had several thousand feet of film made.

Peoria, Ill.—Max Asher, the Universal comedian, appeared at the Liberty theater here and also at Dreamland in Pekin.

Rockford, Ill.—A glimpse of Chinatown is given patrons of the Orpheum theater in Manager Grampp's new stage setting.

DeKalb, Ill.—Manager Reynolds of the Princess theater has had a setting made for the screen in addition to having the whole house beautifully redecorated.

La Salle, Ill.—"A Soul Enslaved" was shown at the Werner theater for the benefit of the People's Hospital.

Waukegan, Ill.—The Triangle feature, "The Morals of Marcus," at the Elite theater added to the Jane McAllister hospital fund.

Monmouth, Ill.—Frank Thornburg of this city, vice-president of the Illinois State Fair, secured for the Princess theater three reels of films of the big exposition which were added to the regular program.

Springfield, Ill.—The Chatterton theater offered one special inducement of a fifty cent admission so that all school pupils would see "The Birth of a Nation."

St. David, Ill.—Manager M. Higgins, Jr., of the Opera house started "The Girl and the Game" with a free matinee for the school children and gave away three season tickets at the night show which was free to women.

Flora, Ill.—The popularity of the serial, "The Broken Coin," is shown by the fact that the Opera here has just started it.

Kansas City Notes

At Joplin, Missouri, an Ordinance Has Been Passed Regulating the Installation and Running of Picture Machine Booths—Children's Shows in Topeka, Kansas —Local Notes from Exchanges and Theaters.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

JOPLIN, MO.—Commissioner J. B. Hodgdon and City Attorney E. F. Cameron recently introduced an ordinance providing for the regulation of the installation, operation and maintenance of motion picture machines, also of the construction and arrangement of audience rooms in which motion picture exhibitions are held. The ordinance was introduced with the intention of eliminating the danger of fire and makes necessary the establishment by most local houses of new regulations regarding safety problems. The ordinance has been passed by the city commission and will be in effect by the middle of May. Violations of the new ruling are punishable by a fine.

Children's Shows in Topeka.

Topeka, Kan.—Topeka women are entering into the field of children's programs and have recently made arrangements for a series of Saturday afternoon matinees for young people. Miss Carrie H Simpson, one of the censors, has formulated a plan to distribute a list of desirable plans for children to those who desire such a thing, and is doing all in her power to help create a demand for this type of pictures. Her list consists of over two hundred pictures, most of which she has personally reviewed. It is probable that it will be sent to various civic organizations, educational boards and women's clubs throughout the state for their use.

Meeting of Big Four Men.

Kansas City, Mo.—One of those occasional conventions of Kansas City representatives of the V-L-S-E was held not long ago in Kansas City, and was, as usual, filled with the vim and vigor that characterize the organization. Plans for the "Ne'er-Do-Well" were outlined, and there was much discussion of the open booking policy—most of the talks being on one side, favorable to the policy. Those present included E R Pearson, manager, L J Scott, publicity manager, F G Gettinger, sales promotion department, and the following salesmen: R L White, J H Glinsky, Milton Feld, Y. Darnell, A. J. Reed, Jack Story, F. F. Nine.

Albert L. Koelzer Celebrates Birthday.

Seneca, Kan.—Albert L Koelzer is said to be the youngest manager of a picture show house in the state of Kansas, and he has built the business of his Royal at Seneca to nice proportions. He had a birthday recently, which he sought to celebrate in a fitting manner, so that he and his community would remember it for some time. So he set that date for signing a contract with the Paramount

Betty Jane Balsley Comes.

Kansas City, Mo.—Lee D Balsley, the genial publicity manager of the Kansas City Feature Film Service, is the possessor of a large smile, even though he did have to be away from his desk for nearly a week. Mr. Balsley now numbers among his treasures a baby daughter who has been given the name of Betty Jane. Mr. Balsley declined to say whether Miss Balsley would be a moving picture actress sooner or later.

Among the Exchanges.

Samuel Lears, of the Lears Theater Supply Co., St. Louis, Mo., paid a visit to Kansas City exchange men, while passing through here on his way to Excelsior Springs, where he went as a delegate from St. Louis for the Republican state gathering.

A private showing of the latest L-Ko comedy, "The Great Smash," was recently given by the publicity department of the Universal here. Interest in comedies has not been as great as desired, and this was given as a runner to more that will follow.

H. A. Roubert, who covers territory for the Aurora Film Plays Corporation, was a recent visitor to the Kansas City industry. The object of his visit was "Pat" Hall, of the Western Film & Supply Co. Mr. Roubert is handling the selling of the state rights for "The Waif," and was here exhibiting the picture to Mr. Hall.

A. J. Braden, a traveling exhibitor of Longmont, Colo., passed through Kansas City recently on his territory.

C. B. Pittenger, a resident of Oklahoma City, is now a traveling representative of the Mutual Film Corporation, with offices in Kansas City. Mr. Pittenger is a former exhibitor, previously owning a house at Watumpka, Okla., and should be able to conciliate any demands of theater managers.

Why Pick on Jameyson?

Why do they always pick on Howard Jameyson? Here, last October, when the exchange men of Kansas City and the exhibitors of Kansas were gathering for their important organizing convention at Pittsburg, a bunch of them hoaxed Jameyson, by surreptitiously putting a bottle of booze in his pocket, and then tipping the fact off to a bogus police official; Jameyson thought he was being arrested — and then they laughed, the victim as hard as any. It happened to be the week of Jameyson's twenty-first birthday, which may have accounted for the hazing.

H. E. Jameyson.

Then, in Wichita at the big convention of exchange men and exhibitors, in March, another frame-up occurred as a feature of the gayety; they created a rough-house, and the Black Maria was called, which engulfed Jameyson, him alone—while the moving picture machine ground away. The victim later discovered that it was a joke; but it seemed serious for awhile.

The reason Jameyson is selected is that he is mightly popular with all the exchange men—and perilously near all the exhibitors. Since going to the Pathe exchange in January, 1915, he has got practically every one taking Pathe service in his territory in Oklahoma and Kansas; since January, 1916, he has been top man with the Kansas City office. At that he is perhaps the youngest traveler in the business now. His first moving picture experience was under C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager at Kansas City—who is naturally rather proud of his selection.

"His personality, and real hard work does it," said Mr. Edwards. Part of the hard work—and the personality—is being always ready to help the other fellow out; and he is full of resources and suggestions.

Local Theater Changes.

Jamesport, Mo.—Under the management of Pat Malone, a building here is being remodeled and equipped for a moving picture house. Mr. Malone is making his first venture into the field of motion pictures. He expects to be operating in his new house about the last of April.

Girard, Kan.—Thomas Miller, of Girard, is having some extensive remodeling and repair work done on a building here and will soon open it as a moving picture house—one which he claims will be one of the best in the state. As a starter for a novelty, he has decided to call it "The Blue Bird." He will probably get into his new house by May 1.

Springfield, Mo.—Work has started on the foundation for the moving picture theater being erected here by Grubel Bros., of Kansas City, Kan. It is probable that the new house will open its doors along the middle of summer some time.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Highland theater, 31st and Highland, Kansas City, was recently sold by Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Jenkins to H. M. Kusel.

Richmond, Mo.—Willis Railey is the new manager of the Sharp theater. Mr. Railey is having the house redecorated and improved.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Auditorium theater, at Ninth and Holmes street, has been leased by George Brant, who will immediately make necessary improvements and turn it into a moving picture house.

Kansas City, Mo.—A theater seating 1,200 people is being planned by William Scoville, of the Idle Hour, Kansas City, to be erected at 18th and Tracy. This house will be for negroes only.

Kansas City, Mo.—E. G. Bailey, manager of the Alamo, 34th and Main streets, has just completed a number of improvements. In addition to a complete redecoration of the house, a four-piece orchestra now takes the place of a single pianist. The lobby has been arranged with chairs, palms, settees and other homelike equipment, until the house now ranks among the best of the suburban theaters.

Kansas City, Mo.—Some novel advertisement was gotten for the Blue Bird photoplay, by George H. Bowles, its advertising manager here, who on the night of the recent election, made arrangements with a local newspaper to allow him to exhibit slides telling of the good points of his company's exhibits and pictures right over their bulletin of results. Mr. Bowles estimates that over 25,000 people saw his display at various times during the evening.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Apollo and the Alamo have been added to the Linwood, among the best of the suburban theaters, that are using Blue Bird features, and the Prospect, in the same class, starts these pictures April 5.

Liberty, Mo.—W. G. Gordon, manager of the Lyric theater at Liberty, Mo., announces that spring is in the air, and that business is picking up. He recently visited the Paramount offices at Kansas City, arranging for service.

Kansas City, Mo.—P. J. Hall, manager of the Western Film & Supply Co., seems to have taken hold of a good thing when he got the "Billy Sunday" pictures. According to Mr. Hall, they are going in great shape. The Sapphire Theater, in the central part of town, has been showing this run and reports a very good business. Two of the local churches have contracted for the pictures and are showing them to their congregations. Probably some of the interest in this series is caused by the fact that Billy Sunday will be in Kansas City on April 29 and begin a series of revival meetings.

DRAMA LEAGUE CONVENTION.

St. Louis to Have Big Annual Meeting —Talks by Picture Men.

By A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—From April 26 to 30 the sixth annual convention of the Drama League of America will hold a convention in St. Louis, and the chief topic of discussion will be on "How to revive the theater." The view that the newspapers present the only means through which to accomplish a genuine revival of theatrical prosperity in this country will be presented by two dramatic critics, Walter Prichard Eaton and Austin Latshaw. Phases of the subject will be discussed by actors, theatrical managers, dramatists and promoters of theatrical enterprises. Among the speakers will be Francis Wilson, William Faversham, Dr. Richard Burton and Edward Goodman.

Word has been received that Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Censorship, will take part in the discussion of the relation of the motion picture and the drama. The committee is in correspondence with Thomas H. Ince and David W. Griffith, in an effort to arrange dates to enable them to be present and speak at the same session.

The convention will take place at the Buckingham hotel and will bring between three and four hundred delegates from all parts of the United States. It is regarded as the most important annual meeing ever held by the Drama League and is expected to have a decided effect upon the theatrical situation in America during the coming year.

New Airdome Site Bought.

St. Louis, Mo.—A lot 25x100 feet at 2109 North Twelfth street has been purchased by the Columbia Novelty Manufacturing Company as a site for an airdome to be operated this summer in connection with the theater next door. The Columbia Company purchased property on the corner of Twelfth and Clinton streets last fall on ground 150x150 feet. There were five houses on the property and these were wrecked in order to build a handsome moving picture theater, the Webster, at a cost of $25,000, which is now under the management of Graham & Sons.

"Dress Up" Week.

St. Louis, Mo.—This city is in the throes of "dress-up" week for men, and theater managers are running slides to the effect that men must spend a little time on their toilet and doll up a little to show how nice they can look when they really try. From the mayor down every man in town is requested to shave every day and wear his newest and best looking clothes during this week. Theater managers, who always look pretty well themselves, have dressed up their theaters with decorations and given a festal air to their houses as a help to the promoters of the scheme, and the World correspondent, not to be outdone, got a haircut and is wearing his other clothes.

St. Louis Business Notes.

Joe Levy, manager of the Fox Corporation offices in St. Louis has just got back from an out of town trip. He says that the small town exhibitors are waking up to the advantages of billboard advertising. Well displayed 24-sheet stands are seen everywhere in the out of town territory.

H. M. Berman, manager of the Metro offices at K. C. was in St. Louis last week with Charles Werner, the local representative of the Metro. Mr. Berman says things are looking up in Metro circles, and he expects that the $250,000 newspaper advertising campaign the corporation is going to start will be a great help to exhibitors showing Metro pictures.

R. C. Seery, manager of the Triangle exchange in Chicago, was in St. Louis last week and visited Floyd Lewis, manager of the local branch of the Triangle.

Royer, of the firm of McNeill & Royer, of Greenville, Ill., who have just opened The Gem, a new moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 200, was in St. Louis last week arranging for his program and supplies. This is the second moving picture theater to be opened in Greenville, which is a small town about fifty miles from St. Louis.

Indiana Exhibitors

Indianapolis Speech by Secretary Binder Has Set Exhibitors Throughout State Earnestly Considering Censorship—An Awakening to the Dangers of It in Indiana—Exhibitors Not Evading Laws.

Special Correspondence Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—One of the much discussed topics among Indiana moving picture exhibitors in recent weeks is a speech delivered in Indianapolis by J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, in which he attacked what he termed prepublicity censorship of motion picture films—censorship before the films are shown to the public. There has been in the past and there is likely to be in the future attempts to bring about strict censorship of motion picture films in Indiana and with the approach of a political campaign which includes the election of state legislators, as well as state officers, it is quite likely that the subject will be brought up during the coming month. This condition has brought about the discussion of the Binder speech in particular and the censoring of motion picture films in Indiana generally.

The discussion has not yet reached the point of action. But out of the discussion is likely to come action. With more than seven hundred exhibitors of the state interested it is not likely that any chances to prevent strict and unreasonable censorship such as has existed in other states, will be overlooked. It is pointed out, too, that the motion picture men of Indiana are well organized following the hugely successful convention of March and that they must be recognized by the various political forces. Within the hands of these political forces lies the power to cause or prevent unreasonable laws being put into effect.

Bad Pictures Not Good Business.

There is no attempt on the part of motion picture exhibitors of Indiana to evade the laws of common decency in pictures for the realization is here that the showing of any immoral or obscene pictures is fatal to the business. It is surprising how few complaints are made in Indiana that exhibitors are showing pictures which do not meet the high moral standards set by the exhibitors themselves in a state where no censorship exists.

It is the general opinion in Indiana that Binder hit the nail on the head when he declared in his speech that "pre-publicity censorship of motion picture films is fundamentally wrong, violating the basic principles of a free government maintained by a free people."

ROUGH DEAL BY FIRE MARSHAL.

A Vincennes Picture Manager Has Cause for Complaint at Treatment.

Vincennes, Ind.—The office of the state fire marshal ordered the Star theater of this city closed because of unsafe conditions, but the office neglected to notify Manager Theodore Charles in what way the theater failed to conform to the requirements of the law. Rumor concerning the order spread throughout the city and hurt the business of the motion picture house. Charles became incensed and wired the state fire marshal for information, using no uncertain terms and making it plain that the office was doing him an injustice. He made it plain that he did not know he was violating the law and wanted to rectify his mistakes if the office would be so kind as to tell him what they were. The same day he got a return wire giving instructions in full. He immediately made plans to remodel. Much criticism was apparent in Vincennes because of what was termed the slip-shod methods of the state office.

Indianapolis Exchange Notes.

J. D. Jameson, new manager of the Famous Players service in Indianapolis, says he is beginning to get acquainted with the territory which his service supplies from Indianapolis and sees possibilities for splendid development. Mr. Jameson came here recently from the East, where he was connected with the same concern. The Famous Players service out of Indianapolis covers parts of Indiana, Kentucky and Ohio. The northern part of Indiana is cared for by the Chicago office.

INDIANA HARBOR EXHIBITORS HARASSED BY OFFICIALS.

City Board of Health Has Caused a Flurry by Sweeping Criticism of Show Sanitation.

Indiana Harbor, Ind.—There is war in Indiana Harbor between the moving picture theater men and the officials of the city board of health.

That it is to be a war to the death, with neither side showing quarter is indicated by the preliminary skirmishes which so far have resulted in deputies from the board of health being sent out to collect evidence of violations of the law and the motion picture men taking steps to fight prosecution.

Claim Poor Ventilation.

The contention arose because the health board declared that the motion picture men were not meeting the requirements of the law in installing proper air ventilating systems. It is claimed by the health board that not a single motion picture house in Indiana Harbor lives up to the requirements of the law and the board further contends that the exhibitors will be forced to install proper ventilating systems or rather systems that meet with the approval of the health board. Prosecution under the state sanitary laws is threatened.

Houses Are Wholesome.

The motion picture men, on the other hand, contend that in most instances the houses which they operate do comply with the laws regarding proper ventilation and that the health board is taking upnnecessary steps and forcing the exhibitors to unnecessary steps to further political plans of the board members. Charges and counter charges are being thrust back and forth and it is likely that more bitter attacks will be made before the controversy is settled.

The Gem Amusement Company of Indiana Harbor is leading in the fight against the health board. The amusement company operates two theaters in Indiana Harbor, the Columbia and the Family.

Manager Craick Will Comply.

Mr. Craick, manager of the Lyric theater, is not "in" on the fight against the health board. He said that he would change the ventilation system of his theater to meet the requirements of the rules laid down by the health board and that changes would be made at once. Mr. Craick said he did not know that his theater failed to conform in every particular to the law or he would have made changes long ago. Manager Ranchey of the Melville theater, will take up the matter with the owner of the theater, J. K. Berry, when Mr. Berry returns from California within a few weeks.

J. G. Conners, who is connected with the Mutual exchange, has direct supervision over the distribution of the American Film Company serial, "The Secret of the Submarine." The serial was released the first week in May and heavy bookings were registered.

All Southern Exposition

New Orleans Picture Men Form the Southern Motion Picture Trade Association at a Meeting on April 6—Will Hold Third Southern Motion Picture Exposition at New Orleans Next February in Mardi Gras Time.

By George M. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—As the outcome of an editorial in Motion Picture Journal, in which a suggestion was made to hold an All-Southern exposition for the motion picture interests in New Orleans, the Southern Motion Picture Trades Association was organized at a banquet of New Orleans film men in the DeSoto Hotel on the afternoon of April 6.

Exposition in New Orleans.

The exposition, the third exposition of its kind to be held in the south, will be held in New Orleans in February of next year. Dallas had an exposition two years ago, the 1916 exposition was held in Atlanta last week, and everybody agreed New Orleans as the site of the 1917 exposition.

J. Eugene Pearce, supervising head of Josiah Pearce & Sons, New Orleans exhibition magnates, was elected president of the association. No other officers were elected at the meeting with the exception of Nat Ehrlich, manager of the Triangle Corporation, who was named temporary secretary in order to take the minutes of the meeting. Al G. Shear, Universal manager, and Karl A. Bugbee, manager of the southern Metro Pictures Corporation, were named members of the executive board.

The first speaker was C. A. Walker, editor of the Motion Picture Journal of Dallas, Tex., who came direct from the exposition in Atlanta to unfold his plans for the 1917 exposition to the film men of New Orleans. In two hours' time Karl Bugbee got every exchange manager on the telephone, and they all assembled in the DeSoto Hotel at one o'clock in the afternoon. Between courses Mr. Bugbee called on the various film managers, exhibitors and newspaper men to get their views regarding the undertaking of such magnitude as the motion picture exposition would be, and the exposition idea was cheered and promises made for the hearty co-operation of all those present.

Mardi Gras Time Chosen.

In a very able address Mr. Walker called attention to the fact that New Orleans was the logical point for the gathering of the exposition in 1917, and he predicted that all attendance records would be broken next year, as it is planned to hold the exposition during the two celebrations of Mardi Gras. L. J. Hennessey, representing the New Orleans Association of Commerce, spoke for the merchants of the city, who, he declared, would give every assistance, financial and otherwise, to the undertaking. Newspaper men present were heartily in accord with the idea and promised all the publicity wanted.

Those present at the meeting were: C. A. Walker, N. S. Thatcher, New Orleans Times-Picayune; R. S. Pritchard, New Orleans Item; J. C. Raglan, Kleine-Edison; L. J. Hennessey, Association of Commerce; J. E. Pearce, J. Pearce & Sons; Nat Ehrlich, Triangle; L. G. Scott, Texas Paramount; H. F. Wilkes, Southern Paramount; Raoul Junet, Pathe; Howard Gale, Kleine-Edison; R. T. Evans, V-L-S-E; Ross Hardenbrook, World; K. A. Bugbee, Southern Metro; S. T. Stephens, Mutual; F. W. Barron, Fox; H. G. Morrow, General; Al G. Shear, Universal; A. Jules Benedic, Motion Picture News; George M. Cheney, Moving Picture World.

The famous old French Opera House in New Orleans is to go under the auctioneer's hammer shortly. It will be sold to satisfy the debts and mortgages against the property under an order handed down in the Civil District Court recently. This action was taken on the petition of Arthur D. Parker, who was appointed receiver in the action brought by G. Pitard's Sons against the French Opera House Association. This famous theater has stood in the Vieux Carre for many years, and in the olden days its boards were trodden by the most famous actors and actresses of the period.

COURT UPHOLDS WORK OF HOUSTON, TEX., CENSORS.

Xydias Amusement Company Loses Suit—Had Questioned Status of Local Censor Board.

Galveston, Tex.—The Court of Civic Appeals of the First District, in an opinion handed down on March 24, lets the moving picture men of Texas know just where they get off, and upholds the right of city censorship boards to pass on the immorality or obscenity of any moving picture. The opinion came in the case of the Xydias Amusement Company et al vs the City of Houston, in which the Xydias Company, in conjunction with other moving picture exhibitors in Houston, attacked the constitutionality of the Houston Board of Censors. Incidentally, the higher court affirmed the action of the District Court of Houston, which dissolved the temporary restraining order obtained by the Xydias Amusement Company and refused to grant an injunction to enjoin the City of Houston and certain of its officials from prosecuting the company from exhibiting motion pictures without first obtaining a permit in accordance with the Houston ordinance regulating places of amusement.

The case was a test brought by Anthony Xydias and other Houston exhibitors for the purpose of learning whether or not city councils have a right under the state law to regulate their theaters and whether the board of censors can legally prohibit the exhibiting of pictures which they decide are immoral, obscene or likely to arouse race hatred.

The Court of Civil Appeals decides that the Houston ordinance in no wise conflicts with or violates any limitations by the legislature, as the picture men had contended. It decides also that the Houston ordinance contains no provisions inconsistent with the constitution of the state or of the general laws enacted by the legislature. It is held that the ordinance is entirely consistent with the constitution and legislative acts of the state pertaining to powers conferred upon the city councils of cities and towns of over five thousand population.

When State Is Silent, City Can Speak.

"The true rule is, where the state law speaks the city ordinance must be silent; where the state law is silent the city may speak." Moving picture men note a great similarity in this decision as compared with the Biblical observation from Ephesians; 'that which hath been done, will be done that which will be done, hath been done; and there is no new thing."

Further, the opinion says: "Moving picture exhibitions are subject to police surveillance and control in the interests of public morals, and it is the right and duty of the city of Houston under its express charter powers and general exercise of its police powers, to regulate, permit or forbid such exhibitions, and to this end appoint a board of censors, clothed with such reasonable authority as is necessary to effect the purposes of their appointment."

It is held that city councils do not derive their power from the legislature to enact ordinances as they deem necessary to prevent certain exhibitions, but that such power is bestowed directly by the voters. Further, it is declared that no longer is there any necessity for the legislature to confer power upon city councils, and that the legislature has only a right to limit their power. The court finds ample legislative authority for this contention.

Atlanta Screen Club Launched

Local Exchange Managers Meet at Hotel Ansley and Appoint Committee on Organization—Player Piano Company Donates Quarters.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Copenhill Road, Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—The Atlanta Screen Club was definitely launched Friday night when about thirty exchange managers and exhibitors met at the Hotel Ansley and named a committee on organization composed of B. Lee Smith, William Oldknow, Eugene Wilder, Robert Savini and Britt Craig.

Joe Marcnette of the General Film Company presided at the meeting; very important exchange was represented. Much enthusiasm was shown over the new club, which will be largely social in its nature.

Rooms at the quarters of the Automatic Player Piano Company, 65 North Pryor street, were donated for the club.

The committee will soon meet and perfect plans of organization. There will be a limited charter membership.

Special Plans for Kleine Film.

Atlanta, Ga.—It became known this week that large southern theatrical interests are planning to exploit George Kleine's motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," in a manner that will lift it out of the average motion picture class and present it in a way that will rival "The Birth of a Nation" tour.

It is admitted that in Atlanta, Jacksonville, Birmingham and other southern cities the picture will be shown only in theaters that have formally been exclusive to legitimate productions.

Definite announcement of the theater in Atlanta which will run the Billie Burke picture novel, is expected in a few days.

The new plan has been determined upon, the Kleine offices here state, because of the expense of the Burke picture.

New Local Pathe Head.

Atlanta, Ga.—B. S. Daniels has been made Atlanta manager of the Pathe exchange, and has already won a host of friends.

William S. Hart in "The Aryan," a Triangle production, will be the star attraction at the Vaudette this week.

The Dr. John W. Ruskin animal pictures have been booked for a return showing at the Grand theater this week.

Miss Gladys Hanson saw herself on the screen at the Piedmont theater here recently.

"The Havoc," a five-part Essanay picture for which Miss Hanson finished posing only a short time ago, was the film Miss Hanson had never seen, as she had left New York for Atlanta before it was projected in the Essanay studios.

IN NEBRASKA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Big Dreamers in Omaha.

OMAHA, Neb.—The name of the Rialto Amusement Company of Nebraska is, it seems, to be connected only with stupendous photoplay projects. First, it wanted to expend $250,000 in making the municipal auditorium into the largest moving picture theater in the world. After the flurry over this unlikely project had subsided there came rumors of a bizarre plan to make of Ralston, Neb., a second Universal City. By the simple "Neither affirmed nor denied" expedient it was possible to hint to the public that great things were in store for those round about Ralston, a town of 300, and that the California moving picture city soon would be distanced. It was even possible to gain the impression that the same men who promoted the western project now saw a great transformation due in Ralston. About the most definite phase of the rumor is the report that the townsite is to be transferred to the Rialto Realty Company and that the realty company was headed by S. E. Schaeffer, who is connected with the Rialto Amusement Company.

Petition for Sunday Show Election.

Beatrice, Neb.—Many Beatrice voters want to make it lawful to have moving picture shows on Sunday. Their desire is evidenced by petitions to the city council asking that a special election be called to vote upon the question of removing the present restrictions.

Dakota Theater Changes.

Breckenridge, N. D.—The Scenic theater, opened here by the King Land and Loan Company with W. L. Quirk as manager, will increase its seating capacity this spring from 250 to 350. Triangle, Bluebird, Fox and Universal service will be used.

Wahpeton, N. D.—The Braun theater will make a fifty foot addition this spring.

Winner, S. D.—The Cosmo theater has installed a 1916 Motiograph. Also it will add Triangle service for Sunday programs.

Screen Club Elects

Minneapolis Screen Club Holds Humming Meeting at West Hotel With Thirty Members Present—D. W. Chamberlain Chosen President—Other Officers and a Board of Governors Also Elected.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The Screen Club of Minneapolis is on its way. The organization meeting called at the West hotel proved to be a hummer and thirty exhibitors and exchange men were present. Luncheon was served and officers elected. The following were chosen: President, D. W. Chamberlain of the American Amusement Company; vice-president, James Keough of the Strand theater; treasurer, S. A. Louis of the Rialto Theater Supply Company; secretary, Thomas J. Hanlin of "Amusements." Board of governors is composed of Joseph Van Meter of the General Film, Fred Meyer of the Laemmle Film, Bert Barnett of the Famous Players and William Koenig of the Gayety and Jitney theaters.

Gilbert Tyler of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company presented the gathering with a box of cigars and after every one present had dipped in, only four smokes remained. President Chamberlain seized the box with its four cigars and began to auction them off to the highest bidder in order to get a nest egg for the treasury of the club. Bidding was fast and furious for a few moments but the contest gradually narrowed down to Mr. Louis and Mr. Koenig. Finally, noticing they were pitted against each other. Louis and Koenig pooled their interests and split on a five-dollar bid which purchased the souvenir cigars and box.

The club already has set another meeting which will be in the nature of a luncheon at the Gruenwald cafe. The board of governors, which is engaged in the task of finding permanent quarters for the club, will make a report at that time. The $5 initiation fee period will last thirty-five days after which it will be raised considerably. The monthly dues are fifty cents.

New Theaters in Minnesota.

New theaters are to be built at Lyle, Minn., by M. Pavalic; at Bricelyn, Minn., by Sampson and Reed, and at Keister, Minn., by Zigner and Reed.

Twin City Motion Picture Company.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Twin City Motion Picture Company announces its organization in Minneapolis where it will be located at 125 South Tenth street. The men responsible for the new company are A. B. Connoble and Raymond L. Lunt. Studios and laboratories have been established and the new firm announces business of a brisk nature already is pouring in.

Do You Look Like a Screen Star?

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Minneapolis "Tribune" has started a stunt for its Sunday picture page which should arouse plenty of interest among residents of the city who are thirty-third degree film fans. It is offering to print on its Sunday page the picture of any girl whose friends insists she looks enough like some screen star to be her sister. The first week brought in its quota of pictures, the editor of the page says.

Plenty of Fake Companies.

Minneapolis, Minn.—How easily film fans and "screen-struck" girls and men can be inveigled into investing money in the photoplay business is being shown daily in the federal court here where E. Franklin Meyers and Byron W. Place, president and manager respectively of the Minnehaha Film Company, defunct, who are on trial charged with using the mails to defraud. One girl paid $100, thinking she was to become a great actress. She got $3 back. Another, who was to become a scenario writer and editor to a motion picture magazine which never appeared, bought $500 worth of the stock. A man dropped $250 to get a job as advertising manager and got $25 back in salary.

Favorite Film Moves.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Favorite Film Company has moved into the new Film Exchange building, making the second tenant to take quarters in the structure which is to be devoted entirely to film companies.

Minnesota Items of Interest.

The Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment Company has purchased a carload of Powers and a carload of Simplex picture machines.

When the Princess theater starts "The Iron Claw" its patrons will be given an opportunity to win some prizes hung up by L. J. Blumberg, Jr., manager. Favors will be won by the person guessing the nearest to the attendance on the first day, the first man and woman and boy and girl who purchase tickets.

Trade papers have been put on the market by two film exchanges here. "The Big Four" is a monthly publication put out by the V-L-S-E office, and Fred Meyer, manager of the Laemmle Film Service, announces the first appearance of a weekly, "Reel Ammunition," which has a sound of being chock full of pictures, "pep" and publicity.

Receipt of a shipment of 6,000 one-sheets, 2,000 three-sheets, 500 six-sheets and nearly 1,000,000 heralds by the Zenith Feature Film Company of Duluth, Minn., establishes one of the record paper shipments received by a film exchange in the Northwest. The company announces this is only one of a large number of such consignments.

Labor Endorses Sunday Picture Shows

Mason City, Iowa, Trade and Labor Assembly Takes Sides With Motion Picture Exhibitors When Attacked by Sabbatarians.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MASON CITY, IA.—Sunday moving picture shows in order to give laboring people a chance to attend have been endorsed in a resolution passed by the Trades and Labor Assembly of this city.

Continuing the crusade against Sunday shows Rev. C. H. Devoie, pastor of the Christian Church, filed information alleging the violation of Sunday laws which led to the arrest of eleven employes of the Bijou and the Regent theaters. Manager J. M. Heffner of the Bijou and Manager J. E. Johansen of the Regent, who were among those arrested, furnished bonds for the employes. Mrs. J. M. Heffner, who is treasurer of the Bijou, was taken into custody.

The third arrest of the two managers was due to an information filed by Commissioner of Public Safety C. A. Cadwell, who also alleged violation of the Sunday laws.

A Publicity Stunt in Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia.—The names of the stars appearing at the Garden, Palace, Strand and Casino theaters were indelibly impressed upon readers of a local paper by a novel contest. The four theaters and twelve business houses used two pages of space. Pictures of twenty-three photoplayers were scattered among the ads without identifying marks. These pictures were all out of position. One of the conditions was to place them properly. For example, the ad of a taxicab service carried a cut of Harry Watson marked "Place here picture of Edna Mayo who appears at the Casino." Miss Mayo's picture was found in the Casino ad but it might have been in a meat market or shoe store ad. Fifteen valuable merchandise prizes were given by the firms who advertised. The prizes were not listed. They were on display at the stores. One of the conditions was to include a list of the prizes. This made it necessary for every contestant to visit every store or theater that offered a prize.

Iowa Theater Changes.

Osage, Ia.—H. E. Baumgartner sold the Lyric theater to Fred Birum and Claude Page.

Spencer, Ia.—D. E. Knight has leased the Unique theater for two years to Summy brothers who will operate a moving picture show.

Davenport, Ia.—Electrical cascades call the attention of the public to the new American theater, Third and Ripley streets which opened April with the Triangle features, "Hell's Hinges" and "Bright Lights."

Clarion, Ia.—The Orpheum theater is the name selected by Manager Lamfers for his new theater.

Sunbury, Ia.—Theo. Pickron has opened a moving picture show in his hall here.

Cascade, Ia.—Keefe & Sauser have opened a moving picture show here.

Texas Film News

Large Exhibition Project to Be Known As Southwestern Amusement Company at Fort Worth—May Control a Dozen Theaters—Notes from Local Exchanges —Theaters and Shows Throughout Texas.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Special Correspondent, 618 Comal Street, Dallas, Texas.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—Messrs. Joe Hulshizer and William Wilder are behind a movement to organize a large exhibition company. The plan is to secure not less than ten houses in as many different places in Texas. The company will be known as the Southwestern Amusement Company and headquarters will be in Fort Worth. The Newport theater Dallas, has been purchased from J. D. Wheelan and will be known as House No. 2. A deal is on for a house in Fort Worth and will probably be closed shortly. Other theaters are under consideration.

W. E. Condell, Kleine Manager.

Dallas, Tex.—W. E. Condell is the new manager of the Kleine-Edison Dallas office, succeeding E. J. Moskowitz, who resigned April 1. Mr. Condell is an old hand at the amusement game having been with George Kleine more than a decade. He introduced "Quo Vadis" in the Texas territory, afterward going to the Kansas City office, then to the Chicago office. Before entering the film business he was on the speaking stage first as a performer and later as a company manager. He has been connected with Cobb & Dill, Frohmann and others.

Just at present the Dallas office is particularly busy with the Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance," which will be handled by the regular force.

World Force Busy.

Dallas, Tex.—Max Graf, Dallas manager of the World Film, held an informal meeting of the road and office forces Wednesday, April 12. W. F. Tuttle, formerly salesman for the General, has been added to the World force. Mr. Graf himself spends a great deal of time on the road, and things are generally busy in that office.

War Pictures on Texas Time.

Dallas, Tex.—The Hippodrome Amusement Company of New York is booking its pictures of the European war, "At the Front with the Allies" in Texas territory. They played to good business in Dallas, April 6-9. Louis Weiss is representing the company here at present but expects to turn the pictures over to some Dallas exchange as soon as a deal can be made.

"Battle Cry" As an Advertisement.

Forney, Tex.—Forney, Tex., boasts the population of about 1,200 but it has one exhibitor who is right up to the minute. This is A. W. Riter, of the Childress theater. When the "Battle Cry of Peace" was new Mr. Riter booked it for two days for $150. In actual figures Mr. Riter lost about $20 on the deal, but he says the advertisement he got out of it has proved to be worth many times that sum. That's real business.

Paris Exhibitors Busy.

Paris, Tex.—All three of the exhibitors at Paris, Tex., who lost everything in the recent disastrous fire, are back at it again. C. J. Musselman, who had three houses, has constructed a temporary building and is open for business. J. H. Snively of the Princess is using a tent. All have expressed a determination to rebuild at once on a much more elaborate scale than before.

McHenry Will Handle California's.

Dallas, Tex.—L. C. McHenry, doing business under the name Southern Cabiria Company, has contracted to handle the output of the California Motion Picture Corporation in the states of Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

"The Unwritten Law," which it was announced would be handled by the Central Feature Film Company at Waco, has been turned over to Mr. McHenry and is the first picture he will book. Others will follow.

Dallas Territory Notes.

Dallas, Tex.—P. C. Crown has added two new houses to the string he controls—the opera house at Childress and the Queen theater at Brownsville. Mr. Crown was in Dallas April 9 and expressed considerable optimism over the business outlook over the state.

Sulphur Springs, Tex.—Barnes & McKnight have just reopened the Mission theater at Sulphur Springs. This is a very fine house, complete in every detail, seating 499.

Longview, Tex.—The Garden airdome has been renovated for the summer run and will open about April 17. The Garden is not strictly an airdome as it is roofed and completely enclosed with a corrugated iron fence. The house seats 1,500 and will be managed as formerly by H. R. Yates.

Mineola, Tex.—Control of the New Star theater has passed back into the hands of G. C. Northcutt. Mr. Northcutt is mayor of the town and not having time to look after the theater will probably lease it again.

Forney, Tex.—A. W. Riter has opened an airdome for negroes. Mr. Riter has lots of fun trying to keep his fence up, as the house is on the edge of the town and exposed to the prairie winds, which are close kin at times to cyclones.

Spur, Tex.—A new house is in course of construction at Spur. C. S. Oates of Dupline is the contractor and M. C. Rouse of Spur is the owner.

Palestine, Tex.—Fred P. Baldwin is the new manager of the Best theater. Mr. Baldwin was in Exchange Row at Dallas April 10 and reports business promising.

Terrell, Tex.—Gwynn & Byar will spend about $3,000 remodeling their Lyric, making it one of the best houses in this territory.

Pittsburg, Tex.—G. N. Mattison is constructing a new house to be run for negroes.

Winnsboro, Tex.—The Star theater has been sold by J. E. Patrick to E. G. Welch.

Rocky Mountain Screen Club Grows

Its Rooms Have Alrdeay Become Too Small—Larger and Better Quarters Found in Tabor Grand Building.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—Although less than three months old, the Rocky Mountain Screen Club has found it necessary to give up its elaborate but small quarters in the Savoy Hotel for larger and more pretentious club rooms in the Tabor Grand Opera House Building. The change was decided upon at the last meeting of the board of directors and steps will be taken at once to move to the new location.

Another pool room will be added to the equipment now owned by the club, the library will be enlarged and other improvements will be made. President Harry Nolan who has traveled all over the country and visited the headquarters of scores of Screen Clubs, predicts that the local organization will have a home second to none when it becomes permanently established in its new club rooms.

A campaign was launched at the weekly luncheon of the Screen Club, which has for its object the bringing of the proposed Actors' Home to Colorado, instead of locating it at Staten Island, N. Y. The Screen Club will seek the co-operation of state and city officials in trying to bring this home to Colorado. The wonderful climate of the state which is known over the whole world as a health restorer, will be one of the chief arguments employed in the campaign.

Action will also be taken to enlist the aid of every exchange manager exhibitor and moving picture devotee in Denver, Colorado and the Rocky Mountain region in the observance of National Motion Picture Tribute Day on May 15.

Otis Skinner was the guest of honor at the weekly luncheon of the Screen Club, Thursday, April 13. Like Arthur Brisbane in one thing, Mr. Skinner admitted that he knew little about the moving picture industry, but said that he was on his way to the Pacific Coast, where he would appear before the camera in a screen production of "Kismet."

After Mr. Skinner had finished a well-turned speech, President Nolan of the Screen Club stated that no better evidence could be required to prove that the moving picture was going ahead than the fact that Mr. Skinner himself was shortly to become one of its stars.

Charles R. Gilmour Recovering.

Charles R. Gilmour, manager of the World exchange in Denver, is convalescing after an operation for appendicitis. He was stricken on a Friday night, was removed to St. Anthony's Hospital a few hours later and submitted to the knife at 1 o'clock Saturday morning. His doctors declared that quick action is all that saved his life.

Denham Palmer, western manager of the World, with headquarters in San Francisco, was telegraphed concerning the illness of Mr. Gilmour on Saturday morning and he left for Denver at once, arriving here Tuesday. He will remain in active charge until Mr. Gilmour is sufficiently strong to resume his duties. It is estimated by his physicians that it will require at least five weeks before he will be able to return to his office.

H. J. Roberts Visits.

H. J. Roberts, special representative of the Fox corporation, arrived in Denver Friday for a week's stay. He is returning to New York after a trip to California. Mr. Roberts is making a tour of inspection of the various Fox offices over the country and reports conditions to be excellent.

New House Opened by B. C. Prescott.

Greybull, Wyo.—B. C. Prescott has opened a motion picture theater at Greybull, in the heart of the new oil fields. He purchased his equipment in Denver and has a first-class plant.

C. Daladau to Manager Denver Theater.

Charlie Daladau, well known among moving picture exhibitors, has been engaged to manage the Eleventh Avenue theater in Denver. He was manager of the Paris, one of the largest downtown houses, when it first opened, and since has had charge of photoplay houses in several of the larger towns in New Mexico.

Fine New Theater for Lamar.

Lamar, Cal.—This city is to have a new $50,000 theater building. Fred Lee, owner of the Opera House and Iris theater, is back of the project. He has purchased a site adjoining his opera house and has had plans drawn for the new structure. It will be larger than either of his present houses and will be provided with all the latest and most up-to-date equipment.

Harry Cassidy, roadman for the Mutual Film corporation, has returned from a trip over the Kansas end of the Denver territory with news of a number of projected photoplay houses.

George W. Hinton and John Drum, roadmen for the World film corporation, have returned after making a complete canvass of the Denver territory on the new Trial Order campaign which is being prosecuted in every section of the United States. The campaign consists of a canvas of all the towns, villages and hamlets where feature films never were run before with the object in view of getting the exhibitor to experiment with the bigger stuff. It is estimated that between 75 and 100 towns in this territory signed up for a trial order. How many of them will become permanent feature exhibitors depends on the success they have with the first trial.

New Theaters and Changes.

St. Johns, Kan.—Winkler & Son, at St. Johns, have completed plans for the construction of a thoroughly modern theater to cost $15,000.

Prairie View, Kan.—Henry Bogarth announces that he will shortly begin work on a new moving picture house which will cost $10,000.

Hoxie, Kan.—J. C. Hart, who in addition to being county clerk is a moving picture exhibitor at Hoxie, Kan., will have his new theater completed in time for opening on June 1.

Mankato, Kan.—Morris & Co. have just completed a new theater at Mankato at a cost of $20,000. It will be known as the Morris Grand.

Wynona, Kan.—Theuvenell & Baker have broken ground for a new theater at Wynona, Kan. The owners expect to open the house by June 1.

Colby, Kan.—J. P. Phillips, manager of the Lyric theater at Colby, Kan., will shortly open another theater at Selden, Kan. It also will be known as the Lyric.

Alamosa, Col.—The Star theater at Alamosa, Col., has been taken over by Frazier & Baiene. New equipment has been installed and the place will be operated as a high-class motion picture house.

Syracuse, Kan.—W. H. Bradshaw of Syracuse has sold the Imp theater to Mrs. James Ford & Son. The son has assumed active management of the house.

Athol, Kan.—C. Bennette, formerly an exhibitor at Kensington, Kan., has purchased the Athol theater at Athol from F. W. Niedemeyer.

CALIFORNIA.

Appointed Coast Distributor.

San Francisco.—G. A. Metcalfe has been appointed exclusive wholesale distributor on the Pacific Coast for the new Speer projector carbon and an active campaign on this article is being planned. The first shipments are expected about the first of May.

Opens Pathescope Office.

San Francisco.—T. W. Johns, formerly manager of the Los Angeles office of the Mutual, has been appointed manager of the Pathescope Company of Northern California and has opened offices in the Bankers' Investment building, 742 Market street.

San Francisco's Rialto

New House from Old American Theater Ready to Open—Has a Special Society Section Comprising 140 Loge Seats—Fine Marquee Over the Entrance—Operating Room is Outside the Theater.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent, 1507 North Street, Berkley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—The new Rialto theater on Market street, just above Seventh, will be opened on April 30 as an exclusive moving picture house. The theater, formerly known as the American, has been practically rebuilt during the past few months, but little of the old structure remaining except the walls and the roof. The balcony has been torn out and a new one about 12 feet lower has been installed, the use of posts having been done away with entirely. Two easy flights of stairs lead from the foyer to the mezzanine floor and the balcony is reached by an incline. A feature of the balcony will be the Society Section, where more than one hundred and forty loge seats have been installed, for which a slightly higher price of admission will be charged. There will also be one row of loge seats on the lower floor, making one hundred and sixty in all. A very large rest room for ladies has been fitted up on the mezzanine floor, with French windows opening onto Market street, the furnishings being in the style of Louis XIV. The hangings are all of velour and sunfast materials and the furniturue is of wicker. The entire house is carpeted, except where the seats are screwed to the floor.

The entrance is an especially striking one, there being a marquee extending over the entire sidewalk brightly lighted. Travertine stone has been used in the lobby to splendid advantage and all trimmings are in bronze. The advertising matter used is shown in attractive frames for which provision was made when the structure was designed. A huge electric sign which can be seen for many blocks adorns the front of the building. The interior decorations are very beautiful, the painting all being done on canvas and then pasted to the walls and ceiling. The stage set is regarded as being one of the finest in the West and has been designed to effectively screen the musicians from view. An interesting feature of the equipment for music is a Wurlitzer Hope-Jones orchestra organ, installed at a cost of $20,000.

Operating Room Outside Theater.

The operating room is located outside of the theater building proper and is 8 by 13 feet in size, with direct roof ventilation. It is equipped with two Powers Cameragraphs No. 6B and Powers dissolver. Two lines of direct current from two sources enters the room and all arrangements have been completed for the installation of a motor-generator set in case the fluctuation in voltage is too great. The throw to the screen is 122 feet. The ventilating system changes the air in the house every three minutes, and it is the intention of the management to permit smoking upstairs.

The Rialto theater is to be conducted by the Western Theater Company, of which Howard J. Sheehan is manager. Arrangements have been made to use, among others, the service of the International Film Service, Inc., and the serial "The Mysteries of Myra" will be strongly featured. The house has a seating capacity of 1,600 and is the first of a chain of theaters which is planned by the company conducting it.

NEW HOME OF GENERAL FILM.

Exchange Now Has Splendid Quarters Built Especially for It.

San Francisco.—The General Film Company is now well settled in its new home at 255 Golden Gate avenue and undoubtedly the quarters it occupies are the finest of the kind to be found on the Pacific Coast. The structure was designed especially for this concern and is very beautiful, comparing very favorably in an artistic sense with the buildings that have made the new downtown district of San Francisco world famous. The building is located on a corner, enabling all shipping to be done from the rear and affording a maximum of light. Six large windows are on one side, with two in front, and in addition there are four large skylights, making artificial light absolutely unnecessary during the daytime. The general offices are of the open type and located in front, with a few offices for private consultation further back. All the furniture and finishing is in light oak with railings and trimmings in brass. In the rear is the inspection department, the shipping department and the poster section, all arranged for the expeditious handling of shipments. On the side are two great fireproof vaults for the storage of film, while a big basement affords room for the storage of advertising matter and general supplies. The task of moving was accomplished without a hitch, under the direction of district manager H. H. Hicks, who has also superintended the erection and furnishing of the building. The exchange building is the only structure in California erected especially for this purpose and occupied exclusively by one firm.

George Kleine to Open Office.

San Francisco.—W. O. Edmonds, representing George Kleine, arrived here a short time ago and has completed arrangements for the opening of an office to handle the Billie Burke serial. A location has been chosen on Golden Gate avenue, near the exchange of the International Film Service, and the office will be opened for business soon.

Producer Retails California Rights.

San Francisco.—The California Motion Picture Corporation, which is disposing of its productions on the state rights basis, has decided not to sell the California rights, but to handle the films themselves in this territory in order to keep in touch with all branches of the business. Ralph H. Clark, who has been with the World Film since shortly after its entry into this field, has resigned his position as manager of the local branch to become the representative of the producing company in its new departure. The offices for the present will be at the studio at San Rafael, but will probably be moved later to San Francisco.

Theater Destroyed by Fire.

San Francisco.—The Electric theater at 1932 Union street, near the Exposition grounds, was destroyed by fire early on the morning of April 7, the origin of the fire being unknown. The theater, which was valued at $8,000, was owned by Joseph Bauer and conducted by Fred Widman.

Changes in World Organization.

San Francisco.—W. W. Drum, formerly manager of the Pacific Coast division of the World Film, with headquarters here, is to return to take up this work again. Denham Palmer, who has been here for some time, is to go to the Denver office, making the change on account of his wife's health.

H. W. Stubbins, formerly assistant to manager Ralph H. Clark of the local office, has succeeded to the higher position.

N. O. Turner, for several months with this exchange, has resigned to take up work as the San Francisco representative of the International Film Service.

Portland's Censor Code

Local Board of Censors Is About to Adopt a Code of Rules Specifying Types of Scenes Which Hereafter Shall Be Barred—Viewers to Be Firmer in Their Decisions, Says Secretary—Censor Board Notes.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Hereafter the censorship of moving pictures will not be left entirely to the good or bad judgment of viewers as has been done in the past. Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the board, stated that some of the viewers had shown woeful laxity in judgment and that the board was going to adopt standards to be followed in the viewing of films. Mrs. Colwell was drafting the rules covering the subjects to be barred and read some of them to the writer. They will be placed under the general sub-divisions of the ordinance, and Mrs. Colwell said they were calculated to clean up the city's pictures. For the past month the members of the board have been visiting the theaters to see the results of the viewers' work. After the rules are adopted the visits will be continued to see that the viewers adhere to the rules.

Mrs. Colwell stated that viewers had been talked out of their original decisions by exchange men. This could not very well be done under the old regime where a viewer, if in doubt, called up the secretary and asked her to pass on the question. With the adoption of the new rules it is evidently intended that the work of the viewers shall become less judicial and more mechanical and that the duties of a viewer shall be merely to see that the rules of the board are not transgressed.

In accordance with an agreement made by the mayor with the moving picture men to head the censor board with a man chairman, F. T. Richards, a member of the board, was selected to succeed Mrs. A. C. Newill. During the month of March 717 reels were viewed by the board in which 20 eliminations were ordered.

ASSOCIATION ELECTS.

E. J. Myrick Chosen President by Oregon Picture Men—Other Officers.

Portland, Ore.—The Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association held its regular election of officers at its luncheon at the Hotel Oregon, April 6. E. J. Myrick of the Columbia was elected president, G. T. Holtzclaw of the Circle and Sunset, vice-president, I. L. Cohen of the Portland Amusement Company, secretary, and F. M. Simonton, of the Standard Feature Film Company, treasurer.

The proposed Sunday closing legislation is being given much attention by the association, and it is co-operating with other business men's organizations that feel that the proposed measure is an uncalled-for interference with legitimate business. The organization is urging all the motion picture men in the state to join it in its stand against the proposed measure.

Ira J. Dodge in Town.

Portland, Ore.—Ira J. Dodge, Seattle manager for George Kleine, was in Portland recently and was seen in the corridor of one of the prominent buildings hobnobbing with Rex Lampman, chief colyumnist on the Journal. It seems that Harry Hicks, of the General Film, and Mr. Dodge and Mr. Lampman were boys together down in Medford years ago before Mr. Lampman forsook the trio for journalistic fields. Mr. Dodge's trip to Portland had to do with the Kleine motion picture "Gloria's Romance," featuring Billie Burke, "the Sunshine of the Screen," to quote from Rex Lampman's colyumn upon that star's appearance in "Peggy" recently. The only thing that seemed to worry Mr. Dodge was how to give all the exhibitors who were asking for the picture a fair chance at it.

Wiman Leaves Portland.

Portland, Ore.—M. E. Wiman, who for the past year has been head booker for the Portland Pathe exchange, has resigned his position and returned to Seattle, his home town. Mr. Wiman was a most popular booker and well liked by Portland exhibitors and a delegation of local men were at the depot to see him off. While he did not disclose his future plans, it is said he is in line for a big job in Mutte, Mont.

M. E. Wiman.

A. & H. Get Portland Empress.

Portland, Ore.—Irving Ackerman and Sam Harris, of San Francisco, owners of the Hippodrome circuit, and John Considine, of the S. & C. circuit, were in Portland recently and after their departure it was rumored that the A. & H. interests had acquired the Portland Empress. This rumor was afterwards confirmed from San Francisco when it was announced that Ackerman & Harris had acquired the Empress theaters in Portland, Seattle, Butte and Minneapolis. This firm entered Portland for the first time when they leased the Orpheum several months ago. It is expected that the Empress will house a combination of vaudeville and pictures.

For Bright School Children.

Portland, Ore.—G. T. Holtzclaw has arranged an educational entertainment for school children receiving an average grade of 80 per cent or over in their monthly examinations. He will give one show at each of his theaters, the Circle and the Sunset, once a month for the children.

Fire at Union.

Union, Ore.—The Cozy theater was badly damaged by an early morning fire on March 29. The fire started at a stairway, evidently from a spark that had been smouldering since the audience had left. The building itself was not entirely destroyed, but the fixtures were ruined by smoke and water. The damage was about $2,700.

Price Raise in Roseburg.

Roseburg, Ore.—The raise in prices in Roseburg, Ore., from 10 to 15 cents, was not entirely successful, according to the reports road men have brought to Portland from the Southern Oregon city. It seems that three of the 10-cent houses agreed to raise to 15 cents, and when the time for the raise came two of them increased their prices, but the third cut his to 5 cents, and those that did raise are having a hard time to make the raise stick.

Other towns in this territory where prices have been raised in all the houses in each town, Salem, for example, report the change has been entirely successful.

Heard on Film Row.

Portland, Ore.—The Majestic theater has installed two 6 x 16 electric signs with three rows of letters and revolving border. These are two of the largest signs of the kind on the coast.

A. Singelow, travelling representative of the Morgan Film Company, was in Portland recently and reported excellent business on his trip from Ashland north.

George Maple, formerly of Roseburg, and more recently of Sand Point, Idaho, is in Astoria managing a theater.

A. E. Reizero has opened the Woodstock theater, Portland.

P. T. Evans, formerly of the Columbia theater, St. Helens, has opened the Richmond theater, Portland.

The Service Film Company reports the sale of two American Standard machines to G. J. Lemansky, of Marshfield, who operates several houses in the Coos Bay country and a new Simplex to the Columbia, Portland.

Wes Kibbey, of Doty, Wash., was a recent visitor in Portland purchasing equipment.

The Empress theater, Chehalis, Wash., C. L. Mellinger, owner, has installed a Wagner Rotary Converter.

Centralia, Wash., will have a censor board. The Women's Civic Club is co-operating with Mayor Galvin and three women have been named to censor moving pictures.

William J. Wood and E. R. Cummings, formerly with the Palace, Roseburg, have opened the Arcade at Cottage Grove, Ore.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Ray Bagley Goes to Long Beach, Cal.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Manager Ray Bagley, formerly of the Empress moving picture theater in Missoula, Montana, and for the past year in charge of the advertising, card writing and lobby display of the Liberty theater, Spokane, Wash., under Ralph Ruffner, will leave Spokane April 17 for Long Beach, Cal. He will be associated with Otis Hoyt, who is erecting a new and up-to-date moving picture theater which is to be opened soon. Mr. Bagley has been in the moving picture work about two years. He has kept a live wire display in the lobby of the Liberty while here.

At the Clemmer Theater.

Spokane, Wash.—Since the opening of the Clemmer theater, Spokane, Wash., February 22, 1915, many shows have drawn audiences which showed persons crowded out into the street waiting admission. Among these were "The Birth of a Nation," "The Battle Cry of Peace," and several productions in which Marguerite Clark and Mary Pickford appeared. The accompanying picture was taken during the anniversary week when the show was Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina."

CLEMMER THEATER, SPOKANE.

Spokane Hits and Programs.

Clarence Crews, who opened the Spokane theater, Spokane, Wash., will supplement his programs with Universal pictures, including the animated weekly. Mr. Crews will adopt a 10 and 20-cent policy, with matinee and two night shows daily, except Sunday, when continuous performances will be the order. Mr. W. Muth will assist in the management.

Pictures which drew well at local play houses were:

"The Rack," with Miss Alice Brady, and "The Blindness of Love," with Julius Steger, at the Class A theater.

"Martha's Vindidation" with Seena Owen in the leading role, and "The Moral Fabric," in which Edith Reeves makes her debut in filmdom, at the Liberty theater.

"The Code of Marcia Gray," presenting Constance Collier in the lead, and "Tennessee's Pardner," featuring Fanny Ward in the title role, at the Clemmer theater.

"The Wife's Sacrifice," with Robert Mantell as the leading man, at the Casino theater.

"The Buzzard's Shadow," featuring Harold Lockwood, at the Majestic.

"The Happy Masquerader" at the Lyric theater.

TO MAKE FILM IN WISCONSIN.

Geeanem Films New Studio in Milwaukee Nearly Ready.

Special to the Moving Picture World from the Midwest News Service.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—Productions of the new Gregory-Mahler Motion Picture Company will be released under the trademark of "Geeanem Films."

It is expected to open the new studio at 510 Edison street about May 1 as construction has been rapid. The studio is three stories high of cement and brick. The factory and business offices will be on the first floor which is 46x90 feet. The studio proper will be on the second and third floors which are 40x46 feet and are so arranged that four sets can be used at a time.

Dr. Le Verne Barber will be in charge of productions and E. J. Savage will supervise the photographic work. It is planned to start with a company of about twenty actors.

Theater Changes in Wisconsin.

Madison, Wis.—Robert G. Nuse has sold the Orton theater property on Williamston street to Albert Sperle.

Rhinelander, Wis.—James Algeo has purchased the Bijou theater from James Morgan. Algeo formerly operated houses in Webster, Aberdeen and McHenry, S. D.

Menomonie, Wis.—A new management soon will reopen the Orpheum theater, it is announced by August Schoenoff, owner of the building.

Manitowoc, Wis.—Frank Plopper will be manager of the Colonial theater for his father-in-law, E. M. Carstens, owner of the building, succeeding Otto Ribbeck.

IN WESTERN CANADA.

Edmonton Universal Closes.

Edmonton, Alberta.—Phil Hazza, who has for some time been the local representative of the Universal, has closed his office and left for Calgary.

Western Canada Items.

Calgary, Alberta.—The Calgary News-Telegram is giving with every cash want ad of 25 cents or over a coupon good for admission to either the Allen, Regent or Empress theater.

Edmonton, Alberta.—Manager Hallgrimson of the Dreamland has just completed arrangements with the Universal Company, giving Edmonton first run on all Bluebird and Red Feather Photoplays. Each production will be run two days, with Sarah Bernhardt in "Jeanne Dore" playing the initial date.

Winnipeg, Man.—W. P. Wilson, manager of the Lyceum, has just signed up for exclusive first run on Paramount pictures in Winnipeg. Mr. Wilson is a particularly progressive exhibitor, having been the first to put the new 15-cent admission price into effect.

Activity of Censors

Report of British Columbia Board of Censors Shows 800 Reels Rejected During Year Passed, Out of 6,800—Many Excisions—Censors' Reasons—Revenue Amounted to $18,278—Expenses to $9,640.

By E. C. Thomas, Special Correspondent, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The Vancouver correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has just received from Hon. W. J. Bowser, Premier and Attorney-General of British Columbia, a copy of the censor's report covering the year 1915, a synopsis of which is presented herewith. These figures show in a particularly forceful manner just how far the censorship hysteria had proceeded in this province previous to the recent change for the better. Although many cuts are still being made in the films, rejections are comparatively few.

The report at hand reveals that out of a total of 6,800 reels which were examined by the censors during the year, 800 reels were rejected as unfit for exhibition—a total of almost twelve per cent. of the number submitted! In addition, "numerous" excisions were made from other films, but as no record is kept of the number of cuts made, definite figures are not available. The report for the previous year, however, states that "several thousand of excisions were made."

In the following official list of rejections it will be noted that many of the "reasons" given overlap each other:

"Generally immoral, 124 reels; infidelity, 116; seduction, 95; depiction of harlots, 72; offensive to religious orders, 37; against public policy, 36; gruesome, 27; indecent vulgarity, 26; white slavery, 24; anti-British, 23; unnecessary display of U. S. flags, 22; excessive crime and gun play, 32; glorifying criminals, 23; dive scenes, 20; unwholesome and evil suggestions, 16; general depravity and viciousness, 16; cohabitation and concubinage, 14; slandering Allies in war, 16; illegitimacy, 13; burlesque of clergy, 13; films manufactured in Germany and Austria, 12; excessive drunkenness, 9; bad example to children, 5; ridicule of temperance movement, 4; nauseous snake films, 3; excessive gambling, 2; insanity for comedy purposes, 2; lewdness of characters, 2."

Eight hundred full reels rejected!

As the censor's department also inspects the moving picture theaters of the province and receives the license fees paid by the theaters, exchanges, operators, etc., an opportunity is offered to compare the total revenue exacted from the industry, with the expense of conducting the department. In the tabulation of revenue appear items of $6,795.50 for censoring films, $7,496.45 for theater licenses, $2,800 for film exchange licenses, and the total amount received was $18,278.10.

To offset this large revenue the expenses incurred consisted of salaries, $8,540; traveling expenses, $800; office maintenance and incidentals, $300 or a total of $9,640. This, it will be seen, leaves a net profit of $8,638.10, which in itself is a fairly respectable amount, and indicates that a little more than half the fees paid at the present time would be sufficient to defray the expenses of administering the censor's department.

Mr. Bowser informs the World representative that he hopes that as a result of several chats which the Attorney-General has had with the censor there will not be the same friction in future between the moving picture people and the department.

TICKET TAX OF CENT.

Alberta Government Decides to Impose Tax Like Quebec's.

Edmonton, Alberta.—A tax on theater tickets, such as is now in force in Ontario and Quebec, has been practically decided upon by the Alberta government, and will be approved by the legislature during the present session. It was originally the intention to levy the tax on the theaters instead of on the ticket-buying public, but it was pointed out that the tax on amusements is already quite heavy and the managers felt that they were not in a position to carry any additional burden.

The tax will be one cent for each theater ticket used, and will apply to all such tickets irrespective of their value. The war-tax stamps will be sold at the box offices. The legislation has not yet been fully adopted, but is now being put into shape, and will become law within a few weeks.

Discuss the Censor's Salary.

Edmonton, Alberta.—Howard Douglas, chief censor of the Province, came in for some very frank criticism at a recent session of the Alberta legislature, and an effort was made to have his salary cut down, but without success. Attention was drawn to the fact that while he draws a salary of $2,400 a year, the cashier of the department of municipalities, through whose hands pass a half million dollars a year, receives only $1,500, and it was suggested that the latter salary be increased to $2,500, with the censor's pay cut down to $1,800.

Dr. Stanley, a Conservative member of the house, spoke strongly in favor of a more rigid censorship of pictures, and stated that many films had been passed which should never have been allowed to be shown. "The Lure" was mentioned by the speaker as being particularly objectionable.

Patriotic Concert at the Classic.

Winnipeg, Man.—A patriotic concert was given on a recent evening at the Classic theater, Roseberry street, St. James, at which were shown six reels of military pictures, with various musical selections and specialties contributed by local talent. So successful was this entertainment that it was repeated on the following evening and the proceeds of both concerts were donated toward the purchase of bugle band instruments for the 222nd battalion, C. E. F.

A Weekly Red Cross Night.

Victoria, B. C.—The first of Manager Clifford Denham's weekly "Red Cross Nights" was held at the Royal Victoria theater on a recent Monday evening, and turned out to be a distinct success. The entertainment was arranged by the Esquimalt sub-committee of the Victoria and District branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society, and many musical selections and several rather pretentious acts were presented by local people, in addition to the regular picture bill. Two performances were given, and 30 per cent. of the gross receipts handed over to the Red Cross. The band of the Fifth Regiment paraded the streets of the city during the evening with a banner advertising the show, and materially helped the attendance.

It is planned to hold a similar entertainment for the benefit of the society on each Monday evening hereafter.

Talking Over a General Raise.

Vancouver, B. C.—A meeting of local exhibitors was held recently at the Famous Players exchange, and the question of a concerted raise to an admission price of 25 cents was discussed. Although some were in favor of making the change, other managers took the stand that now, of all times, is not the time to raise prices,

MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, MAY 6-14

Given by the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc.

Exhibitors

Special delegations from exhibitors' organizations in fourteen states will be present and take part in all convention meetings, including projection day. A feature of projection day will be addresses by F. H. Richardson, J. H. Hallberg, and others. Exchange men, operators, manufacturers and others will take part in these meetings. A great opportunity for exhibitors to get new money-making ideas to work out in their own theatres.

California Day

A special train of producers, directors, exhibitors and well known actors and actresses direct from the various California studios will be the feature of California Day. The special train and special programme for the day will be under the management of Mr. H. O. Davis, President of the California Motion Picture Producers' Association. An entire day will be given over to the feature and—take it from one who knows—it's going to be a big day.

New York Fashion Day

In charge of Miss Florence Rose. All the latest creations of leading fashion artists will be shown on mannequins, then pictures will be made and exhibited on the screen next day.

OTHER BIG CONVENTION EVENTS

RICHARDSON SAYS THAT

THE REPORTS RECEIVED BY HIM THROUGH THE PROJECTION DEPT. ON

SPEER CARBONS

HAVE UP TO DATE BEEN ALMOST INVARIABLY GOOD!

NOTE: The following is reprinted from page 621 Projection Department, Moving Picture World, April 22nd:

SPEER CARBONS

F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas, forwards answers to questions 119 and 120, and says:

"This is my first offense on the questions, by reason of the fact that I was ashamed to show my ignorance. I note you want reports on Speer carbons. We bought two hundred of them which they said were shipped out from the new factory erected solely for the manufacture of projection carbons. Well, the minute I struck an arc (using A. C.) I felt there was something different. The light seemed brighter and of a greenish hue. It certainly makes the picture stand out. At first I had some trouble in getting them to burn just right, but after putting a half dozen on top of the lamphouse they burned better. Now all this may be purely imagination, but my opinion is that the Speer is good."

As to "showing your ignorance," Brother Bell, why, good Lord! man, I expose mine several times each week, and don't mind it a bit. Reports on the Speer carbon have, up to date, been almost invariably good. Probably the reason they burned better after being placed on the lamp-house is because they were damp, and dampness in carbons does not make for good results on the screen.

SO SAY THEY ALL!!!

VITAGRAPH.

THE ROOKIE (April 24).—The cast: Jim Rooney (Evart Overton); Mrs. Rooney (Dorothy Kelly); Jimmie, their son (Bobby Connelly); Bonita (Ned Finley).

"When you go out to get a man, get him." Jim Rooney had these words drummed into him so well that he knew them by heart, and was longing for a chance to put them into practical use. Jim was just one of those score or more of rookies on the police force, and was impatient for action. Finally it came.

Hans Schmidt, a laborer, after killing another man in an argument, feils the policeman who had tried to capture him. The reserves are sent out from the station house. Jim among them, eager to prove his mettle. Jim chases the murderer, exchanging shots with him. On the roof Hans is cornered and turns to fight. A terrible battle ensues on the edge of the roof, Schmidt trying to throw Jim over. Jim stumbles and Hans, taking advantage of the situation, stuns him with his club. A vision of the captain comes to his mind and he remembers the advice to "get your man."

With a final heroic effort Jim crawls to Hans' side and fastens the end of the handcuffs to his arm, and the other to his own wrist. Hans, infuriated, races around, dragging Jim with him, and beats him unmercifully in his effort to escape until the captain and the reserves arrive and prevent the murderer. As they hold resolutely over the still form of Jim, he opens his eyes a weak smile crossing his lips, and says, "Captain, you told me to 'Always get my man.' I got him." The words had scarce left his lips when the rookie fell back dead.

TERRY'S TEA PARTY (April 28).—The cast: Father (Joseph Kelly); Mother (Kate Price); Daughter (Jewell Hunt); Count (Joe Donohue); Valet (Lawrence Semon); Percy (James Morrison); Son (Hughey Mack); Arthur (George Morrison); Footman (Lawrence Semon).

The count doesn't get the kind of welcome he expected when he calls. As he entered, he never expected to be met at the front of the house with a keg of lard. But that's what happened. Father had been receiving in his honor tailor-shop and then peacefully stealing into after stock of his favorite beer from the keg which mother, a staunch prohibitionist, cried his. She took out a good thrashing to father and then turns her attention to the keg which she pushes out of the room. Just as it starts rolling down stairs, the count enters and unwillingly steps in front. When he presents himself the valet recognizes him as the chef in the corner restaurant and tells father, who immediately makes arrangements for the count's hasty exit. The gang of "roughnecks" father hires to carry him off do their job thoroughly and father, anxious to satisfy friend wife, volunteers to search for them. His search starts and ends in the back room of Daly's saloon, where, in a fine mood, he "sets 'em up" for the crowd.

THE MAN HUNT (Three Parts—April 29).—The cast: Ralston (James Morrison); Col. Dunn (Robert Gaillard); Gladys (Belle Bilhing); Ellen (Marguerite Blake); Sullivan (E. A. Turner); Steadwell (Raymond Walburn). Author, Arthur Train. Produced by Paul Scardon.

The Twelfth Regiment is to leave for the front in the morning at seven and Captain Steadwell, who has been missing for three days, has not yet appeared. Unless he is found and returned to the head of his company by seven the next morning, disgrace will fall on him and his fiancee, Ellen Ferguson.

Ellen is also loved by the new assistant secretary of war Ronard Ralston who does not know of her engagement. Worried by Steadwell's continued absence Ellen appeals to Dick to find him. Dick sets out to locate him and the trail leads to Gladys an actress whose photo was on Steadwell's table. Gladys agrees to assist in the search. They go into a swell restaurant, and Ellen, seeing them thinks Dick is not searching for Steadwell.

In the restaurant they meet Sullivan the last man seen with Steadwell but he refuses to give any information. A fight follows in which Dick delivers a crushing blow to the other's chin and knocks him unconscious. They pack Sullivan into a cab, where they try to revive him, but fail. Thinking he has killed him, Dick asks Gladys to telegraph the President his resignation, but she refuses and the search continues. At Sullivan's home they finally revive him and force him to tell that Steadwell is in the room above. As they go up, Sullivan signals to his friends above by tapping on the wall. When they get up, they are shot at from the inside, and Dick falls as if wounded.

When the two gamblers in the room come over, he jumps up and, covering them with his gun, locks them in a closet. Inside the room they find Steadwell, stupefied from drink. They finally get him out and he joins his regiment in time for the departure. Steadwell on meeting Ellen agrees to release her from their engagement, and Ellen, learning that Dick was responsible for Steadwell's return, allows him to see that the love light in her eyes is for him alone.

SELIG.

SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 27 (April 3).—

Quincy, Mass.—The U. S. torpedo boat destroyer Rowan is launched here in the presence of a large number of U. S. Naval officials.

Seattle, Wash.—In fulfillment of their treaty with the Allies Japan is importing great quantities of ammunition and war supplies of various kinds.

Redwood City, Cal.—The stalwart oarsmen of Stanford University begin spring practice here preparatory to the battle for the West Coast Championship.

Near Verdun, France.—Behind these wire entanglements, human beings live for months like moles with apparently very little physical discomfort. The French chef is as much at home here as when presiding in the kitchens of the world's greatest hotels.

Saltillo, Mexico.—Carranza troops leave here presumably for Chihuahua, to intercept Villa before he escapes into the fastnesses of the Sierra Madre Mountains.

Near Naniquipa Mexico.—American troops operating in the vicinity are striving desperately, by making forced night marches, to "bottle" up the bandit Villa.

Houston, Tex.—Five thousand bales of cotton burn in spectacular fire here, which destroys huge warehouse in railroad yards and burns loaded cars standing on tracks. Loss over $1,000,000.

Deming, N. M.—Juan Sanchez, one of Villa's bandits, who after being captured confessed to having participated in the raid at Columbus, N. M.

Columbus, N. M.—The arrival of additional U. S. troops here as well as supplies of every description, for American soldiers in Mexico, make Camp Columbus the busiest post in the United States.

SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 28 (April 6):

Salonika, Greece.—General Bailloud, Commander of 156th Division, French army, is decorated with a medal for bravery by a private soldier whom he has previously decorated with the same honor.

New York, N. Y.—Mrs. Harry H. Horton, the "other woman" in the million-dollar murder mystery calls on the District Attorney to say that Dr. Waite is innocent, despite his confession.

Boston, Mass.—Not "The River of Doubt," but the "Bird of Doubt," is the question which is agitating Ornithologists since the "Sage of Oyster Bay" brings to us his "Guacharo."

Toronto, Canada.—With high dignitaries of the church and army officiating, the colors of the 75th Battalion are blessed during impressive ceremonies, before the Regiment leaves for the front.

Stratford-on-Avon, England.—This most interesting picture of English women, assisting the Army Service Corps to harvest the hay crop, indicates no lack of patriotism on the part of rural femininity.

London, England.—Princess Arthur of Connaught, accompanied by Major General Sir Francis Lloyd, attends the Church Army Soldiers' Club.

Near Guerrero, Mexico.—In a running fight here, General Cavazos, commanding Carranza troops, has a sharp brush with a detachment of Villa's soldiers.

Cambridge, Mass.—The Harvard "Preparedness" regiment, having just received their new gun equipment, hold their first open-air drill.

In Columbus, N. M., and Mexico.—Interesting pictures by the Selig-Tribune cameramen show daily routine of camp life here, as well as along the hot and dusty line of march into the interior.

THE WOMAN WHO DID NOT CARE (Three Parts—April 24).—The cast: Mrs. Boyd (Eugenie Besserer); Edna, Mrs. Boyd as she was 18 years ago (Eugenie Besserer); Rose Carlson (Edith Johnson); Jack White (Harry Mestayer). Directed by Frank Beal. Written by Charles J. Buckley.

Mrs. Boyd, prominent in society circles, is secretly the author of Madame Gossip's column in a prominent newspaper. She is a good friend of the Carlson and White families, and makes frequent calls.

Jack White is in love with Rose Carlson, and he confides in Mrs. Boyd, who cautions him to be wise in his selection of a mate. On the trail of the gossipers, Mrs. Boyd sees Rose exhibiting her ring, when a lady whispers in her ear that Rose is only an adopted daughter of the Carlsons. This choice bit of gossip appears in the paper. Jack's parents demand that the engagement be broken.

Rose goes to Mrs. Boyd for consolation. Realizing that Jack is Rose's fiance, Mrs. Boyd becomes remorseful. Rose's grief causes Mrs. Boyd to confess that she is Madame Gossip, and she explains how she became so, and how gossip had ruined her life.

Eighteen years before, Mrs. Boyd was happy in the company of her husband and child. Eva, an adventuress, enticed the husband away. Mrs. Boyd, heart-broken, took her child to a rooming house. The husband demanded the little one, and told his wife he would have Eva raise the child, and sue her (Mrs. Boyd) for a divorce. The court granted the man a divorce and the custody of the child. Realizing that the court decision may mean the ruin of her child, she sacrificed her reputation by swearing that her former husband was not the child's father. Then Eva and the husband were married, and the ordeal having unbalanced Mrs. Boyd's mind she was taken to an asylum and the child was adopted by strangers. After ten years she was released, but was unable to locate her loved one.

Rose then tells Mrs. Boyd that her life's story strangely resembles hers but of course, her mother is dead. While calling on the Carlsons Rose brings forth the clothing she wore when she was adopted, and Mrs. Boyd makes a startling discovery. It is her awakening, and, going to the Whites she asks Jack to renew the engagement. She is shown the newspaper item, and also reminded of what she had said of Jack's selection of a wife, but Mrs. Boyd says the paper lies and finally admits that she is Rose's mother. The engagement is renewed, and Rose goes to her mother's arms and receives her blessing.

BADGERED (April 29).—The cast: Colonel Jackson (James Bradbury); Vera Jackson (Grace Darmond); Paul Robertson (Harry Mestayer); George Prentiss (Al W. Filson); Fanny Stokes (Edith Johnson). Written by Wm. M. Henry. Directed by T. N. Heffron.

Colonel Jackson, newspaper owner and politician considers Vera, his beautiful young daughter, the apple of his eye. Paul Robertson, newly elected to the legislature, is in love with Vera. George Prentiss, a grafting political "boss," is instrumental in causing Robertson's election, because he believes that he can handle Robertson.

The politicians scheme to reclaim Empress Valley by diverting water from the Folsom tract, and demand that Robertson support this reclamation measure. Robertson, however, refuses, claiming that the Empress Valley bill would ruin the farmers of Folsom.

Prentiss tells his henchmen that they must force Robertson into submission. They induce Fanny Stokes, who lives by her wits, to aid them in their attempt to compromise Robertson. They arrange to make it appear that Robertson has met the woman in a hotel, and they summon some reporters to be there at a certain hour.

Prentiss, Colonel Jackson and the reporters appear in the hotel and call Robertson. He appears and with him is Vera, the Colonel's daughter. They tell the callers, "We were

BIOGRAPH.

THE LARRIMORE CASE (Three parts—Apr. 19).—The cast: The Girl (Vera Sisson); The Rivals (Charles H. Mailes and Jose Ruben); The Other Woman (Gretchen Hartman).

Two stock brokers love the same girl. She chooses the more prosperous and marries him. The disappointed lover plots revenge. Through his rival's junior partner he effects the financial ruin of the couple. Later he is found dead. Circumstances point to the husband and wife. At their trial it is dramatically revealed that the murderer is the junior partner, and the motive revenge for having been used as a tool by the victim.

THE BLIND PRINCESS AND THE POET (Reissue—April 24).—The cast: The princess (Blanche Sweet); Lady-in-waiting (Florence la Badie); The poet (Charles H. West); The duke (Francis Grandin).

A wise man declares that the first kiss of unselfish love will restore her sight to the blind princess. John Selfish, Duke of Worldly-Wise, and many another, including Lords Gold, Folly, and Presumption, put their fortunes to the test, but fail. A poor poet, who loves the princess, kisses her eyes, and she sees. He, hastening away, fearful that his love is really selfish, is waylaid by soldiers of the furious duke, who are about to kill him when the king comes on the scene and rescues the bestower of the miraculous kiss.

CELESTE (Two Parts—April 25).—The cast: The artist (Charles Perley); His wife (Claire McDowell); Celeste (Vola Smith); The fisherman (Ivan Christy); The tourist (Jack Mulhall); Prosper (Jack Drumeir).

The artist's wife and baby leave for a trip abroad and are shipwrecked. He belives them lost, but the baby is washed up on shore and adopted by a fisherman. Grown to womanhood, she is loved by a tourist who visits the fishing village. Her fisherman lover, in a fit of jealousy, attacks the tourist. Both fall over a cliff and are thought to have been killed. But the tourist later meets the artist, who believes that he identifies the fisher-girl as his daughter. Searching for Celeste they find her eventually as an artist's model.

A SPRING CHICKEN (Three Parts—April 26).—The cast: Farmer Chickweed (Jack Mulhall); The doctor (Clarence Barr); Henry (Dave Moris); Fuller Coyne (Bud Ross); His wife (Louise Owen); Lotta Noyes (Gertrude Bambrick); Mrs. Spooner (Florence Lee); Hotel proprietor (Reggie Morris).

Squab? No! Broiler? No! Those terms were all right when applied to any other Jane under twenty years of age; but she was the only one of her kind—The Spring Chicken—and because she was the sweetest, cutest, most distracting of her sex she could wipe her little boots on any male citizen south of Broadway and Forty-second. You know the play—or, if you don't you ought to. Here it is in three reels of comedy, with Gertrude Bambrick, those Morris boys and a galaxy of pretty girls, all raising Ned.

KALEM.

THE SOCIAL PIRATES (Episode No. 3, "The Parasite"—Two Parts—April 10).—The cast: Mona Davenport (Marin Sais); Mary Hartley (Ollie Kirkby); Thomas Reynolds (Frank Jonasson); Quong Lee (Thomas Lingham); Stallings (Paul C. Hurst); Reynold's butler (Edward Clisbee); Mrs. Wharton (Jess Whitney). Director, James W. Horne.

An affair of school days, when she wrote many foolish letters, has placed Mrs. Wharton in the clutches of Reynolds, a clever society blackmailer. When Mona and Mary learn of her plight their pity causes them to lay a trap for Reynolds that will cost him dearly. Mona, by a clever ruse, secures a position in the schemer's household. When she learns that Reynolds keeps the papers and letters that form so large a part of his stock in trade under guard in a safe she instructs Mary to call in the aid of Stallings, a well known cracksman. There is cross-play of action from then on, with the fate of the girls' plans at times in doubt, until the close finds Mrs. Wharton happy in the recovery of the letters that remove her from the vulture's power.

MILLIONAIRES BY MISTAKE (April 11).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); The conspirator (Norma Nichols).

Ham and Bud inherit a million. They go off to a swell hotel to spend the money. Conspirators with greedy eyes on their wealth lay a trap for them and Ham falls a ready victim to a near-vampire, while Bud proposes to a fortune-hunting young lady. But a desperate villain is on their track and when he arrives—well the finish is a riot of fun which leaves Ham and Bud satisfied to remain poor for the rest of their days.

FASHION AND FURY (April 12).—The cast: Wifey (Ethel Teare); Hubby (Jack MacDermott); Hubby's accomplice (Victor Rottman); The cook (Myrta Sterling); The gardener (H. Davenport). Produced by William Beaudine.

Ethel doesn't follow the styles—they follow her. But even Hubby is shocked when Ethel arrives home in a catchy harem skirt. There is a quarrel and both set out to get a divorce. Jack hires a man to make love to his wife and Ethel engages a burlesque queen to flirt with Hubby—both in search of evidence. The plans collide. But after a mix-up we find Ethel back in Hubby's arms and Hubby more than glad she is there.

ROMANCE AND RIOT (April 14).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); The Chief (Henry Murdock); The Police Force (Frank Minzey); Second Story Bill (Fred Schierbaum); Mr. Mossbanks (Richard Purdon); Mrs. Mossbanks (Olive West); Their daughter (Mary Kennedy); Reggie, her sweetheart (Arthur Albertson). Author, John E. Kevan. Producer, Robert Ellis.

When Reggie is banned from the Mossbanks home, he plans an elopement for that evening via the ladder route. Unfortunately Sis' imagination has been working overtime since she heard that Second Story Bill was at large with a thousand dollar reward on his head. She spoils the elopement by her blundering and succeeds in having Reggie landed in jail as a burglar.

Meanwhile Sis is the object of the ardent rivalries of the police chief and the police force, Reckless Rudolph. Their bitter bickering causes Sis to blunder into the capture of Second Story Bill and the thousand dollar reward, which she immediately pays out again in order that she may pay Reggie's fine and patch up the romance she had spoiled.

THE RACE FOR A SIDING, No. 75 of the "Hazards of Helen" (April 15).—The cast: The operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); The detective (True Boardman); His assistant (Percy Pembroke). Written by S. A. Van Petten. Produced by James Davis.

Through an accomplice the band of conspirators preying on railreads succeed in having the box-car loaded with auto tires sidetracked at Lone Point instead of being taken on to its rightful destination. They are getting away with the valuable shipment when Helen takes a hand in the affair. While each of the trio carries a load of tires back to the autos which are in a sheltered spot, Helen hurriedly climbs the side of the box-car and releasing the brakes the car, with its heavy load, starts down grade at great speed.

Later, when the conspirators overpower the detectives sent to capture them and send their engine running wild down the tracks it seems certain that Helen, alone on the box-car, is doomed to death. Fortunately, her signal is seen by the switchman and without a foot to spare, the box car takes the siding just as the engine tears by. Helen, throwing caution to the winds, leaps to the tender of the engine and in a moment it is brought to a stop.

ESSANAY.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, No. 13, "Dawning Hope" (2 Parts—April 17).—The calling of the gambler Jim Bates to the stand at the opening of court brings the information that he has been missing for two days. Langdon, defending Mary Page for the murder of Dave Pollock, is visibly worried. Mayer, the impresario, testifies how he starred Mary Page after taking her out of the chorus at Pollock's behest. Finding Pollock irritated her he warned him the show would be abandoned as he could not tolerate his actions. At the conclusion of his testimony Langdon asks for an adjournment. He hastened to locate Bates and finds him in a saloon. Bates, trapped, is aided by companions and Langdon is tossed into a room. Bates is warned to catch a fast freight west and Langdon, hearing the scheme, drops out of a window and follows. He pushes open a door and Bates crouched in a corner is ready to shoot. He hesitates, however, and Langdon gets the gun, but not before the train is moving too rapidly for flipping.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, No. 14, "Recrimination" (Two Parts—April 24).—The gambler, Bates, stubbornly refuses to talk to Langdon, who has him covered with a pistol in the box car. A shot warns the passing brakeman and the train is stopped. Langdon, pushing his prisoner ahead of him, walks to the nearest station. All night he had watched his man. Court opens in the morning and Langdon fails to appear. His assistant is refused an adjournment. Chester, with Bates, the chief aids of Big Jim Cunningham, is on the stand telling how Pollock and the gambling house owner split, the latter at the time intimating that something might happen to Pollock if there was any further conflict. As Chester was describing the events just preceding the death of Pollock he mentioned that following a shot he saw Bates running down an alley. Bates and Langdon enter at that moment and the former, infuriated, by the apparent accusation, cries out: "He lies. He killed Pollock himself."

Court is adjourned to take up the new accusation which promises to solve the mystery for which Mary Page is held.

THE LITTLE SAMARITAN (Two Parts—April 25).—The cast: Joyce Farley (Joyce Fair); Her Grandfather (Thomas Commerford); Her Father (Fred Malatesta); Her Mother (Frances Raymond).

On the morning of her eleventh birthday Joyce reads in one of her gift books that she should aim to let not a day pass without performing some good act. Her father gives her five dollars just before she leaves for a stroll in the park with her maid. She steals away and slips the bill into the hand of an old man on one of the benches, fleeing from his protests. Her mother, learning of her actions in the park, reprimands her and warns her that old men steal little girls. She goes to the park next day to see if this is true.

Finding her old friend, and assured by his denials, she gives him the collar from her dog with her address engraved upon it. She invites the old man to come to that address. When he does she secrets him in the attic. Her father and mother go to the opera and the maid steals away in their absence. Joyce goes to the attic and from the old man hears the story of how he left his little girl with friends years before, and when he returned, all trace of her had been lost. The Farleys come in at this time and discover Joyce in the attic with the old man, the dog revealing the hiding place. The old man recognizes Mrs. Farley as his long lost daughter much to the delight of all except Joyce, who pouts that she can have nothing of her own without others sharing it.

So she invites a host of human derelicts in to dine, insisting that they, too, perhaps have lost their little girl.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF ROME (April 26).—The ancient glory of Rome is exceptionally well pictured in these motion drawings from the pen of this sketch artist. The Vatican from all its impressive angles has been caught by the photographic eye of the artist. The ruins of the Coliseum are vividly pictured also in this split reel feature, which shares the thousand feet equally with film of the beauties of western America. The famous Forum and the beautiful cathedral of St. Peters have been graphically duplicated on the screen.

THE DANGER LINE (Three Parts—April 29).—The cast: Rose Lane (Elizabeth Burbridge); John Herriman (Edward Arnold); Samuel Jermaine (Richardson Cotton).

Rose Lane has scored a success in college theatricals and won the congratulations of the school. John Herriman, a New York star, a quiet, honorable man in the early thirties, has seen her and tells her the portrayal was excellent. Hardly had she received such congratulation when a telegram came from her mother notifying her of the death of her father, and asking that she hurry home.

At home she finds the mother in dire straits, being forced to take in sewing to live. Rose abandons her hope of stage success and sets out to find a position. She gets work as a typist in the office of Samuel Jermaine, theatrical manager. Inadvertently she meets Herriman, who is to play the lead in Jermaine's new venture. He recalls her ambition and arranges for her to receive a small part. The enthusiastic girl, having copied the play, knows every line of it. The leading lady is infatuated with Herriman, but he ignores her.

To further complicate matters the rough director makes advances to Rose and is likewise spurned. Jealous of the star's interest in the girl, the leading lady attempts to injure her. Failing, she refuses to go on the opening night. Rose timidly requests the chance to play the part, and Jermaine, desperate, consents. She meets with a wonderful success, for the love scene in the play with John Herriman is far more real than the "first-nighters" suspect.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

WHEN MIGHT IS RIGHT (Three parts—April 21.).—Thomas Durkeen, president of the Commonwealth Steel Car Company, rules over the wage earners while his daughter, Elsie, is a friend of the working class. Durkeen receives a telegram stating that Jack Crawford, representative of the workers, is to arrive in the city to plead their case and is worried over the result. Durkeen refuses to see Rev. Townsend who is soliciting funds for the foreign mission and learns later from his friend, Congressman Bradley, that Townsend is an impostor. A book is handed to Durkeen by his secretary suggesting the use of religion to hold in check the workers. Crawford arrives in time to save Elsie's chauffeur from an angry mob of tenement women, who are intent on mobbing him for accidentally running down a little child who was playing in the street. Crawford is unable to hold the crowd in check and Townsend happens along and respecting his garb the crowd disperse.

Crawford receives an anonymous letter, written by Ruskin, telling of Durkeen's intention of using religion. Crawford remembers seeing a certain book on Durkeen's desk and purchases a copy. In reading it he convinces himself that Durkeen's plan will fail. Townsend is engaged by Durkeen to go to the mill town in the guise of an evangelist to try to turn the people against Crawford. The injured child proves the excuse for a number of meetings between Elsie and Crawford, and before his departure a strong bond of affection has grown between them. Crawford is elected to the legislature where he introduces a minimum wage bill. Ruskin has a quarrel with Durkeen and vows vengeance. Crawford's bill is defeated by Durkeen's "lobby" and the men strike.

Durkeen asks Elsie to accompany him to Commonwealth and see her symbol of justice crushed meaning Crawford. Elsie accepts the offer to prove to Durkeen that she is confident of Crawford's ultimate success. Upon his arrival, Durkeen instructs his thugs who immediately proceed to murder both men and women. Ruskin arrives in Commonwealth with a clergyman who exposes Townsend, who flees for his life, seeking refuse in Durkeen's house in Commonwealth. The strikers turn on Durkeen's thugs and beat them up. Crawford learns of the riots and arrives in time to hold in check a mob who are intent on breaking into Durkeen's house.

Crawford obtains their consent to a three-minute respite, during which time he proves to Durkeen by turning the page of the book, that his defeat is imminent. Elsie enters the room, and Crawford being unaware of her presence in the house, is brought to a choice between love and duty, which Elsie decides for him, by threatening to give herself up to the mob unless her father signs a paper admitting his dishonesty. Durkeen signs the paper but on hearing a moment later that the militia has arrived, he regrets his action, and grabbing a revolver he tries to kill Crawford. Townsend raises a chair to deal Crawford a blow but is stopped by Elsie who trips him, causing him to fall. The time having expired the mob breaks in led by Ruskin who carries a revolver and fires, killing Durkeen. The militia arrives and arrest Ruskin. Elsie grieved over her father's death finds solace in Crawford's love.

ALL FOR A GIRL (April 20).—Plump and Runt were in the throes of love and as these their path was not of the smoothest. In addition to this their chances were low as how that the object of their affections, Elsie, was bewildered by the promise of love in a cottage. To test their executive capacity it affords them that the one who first makes good in a position will win her hand.

At once they seek work. Runt becomes office boy in a bank. Plump is put to successful until one day he loses his job and tramps the streets. Meeting Elsie from school, in gratitude the latter makes him an appointment and using his newly-acquired power, Plump immediately fires Runt. The latter now gets work in a circus. Elsie sends an invitation for a little dance to the bank for Runt, but finds that Plump is there instead. She changes the note so that it reads Mr. Plump. He is overjoyed and on his way to the party calls into the very pressing job where Runt is employed to have the creases pressed.

Meanwhile Runt discovers the note in Mr. Vim's coat and not knowing that originally it was intended for Runt, again changes the address to his own name and vanishes with the clothes. He appears at the party to Elsie's great surprise, the while poor Plumb is chasing around the streets in a barrel. Finally Plump arrives at the scene of the festivities and his entrance up the barrel breaks up the party. Explanations ensue and the fat boy wins his love, much to the disgust of his Runty rival.

HIRED AND FIRED (April 21).—Pokes and Jabbs both being broke see an ad in the paper stating that Mr. Gink, a wealthy and dyspeptic old grouch is in need of a secretary and a butler. They secure the positions and after being installed in the house, both fall victims to the smiles of Ethel, the pretty maid. Gink gives a large reception and among the guests is the Countess de Splash, famed for her jewels and her sweetheart, Cyril Cerise.

Pokes and Jabbs get one flash of the diamond anklet worn by the Countess and both resolve to secure possession of it, in the hope that thereby they can win the affections of the charming Ethel. However, among the guests is also Rattles, the society crook, and Ethel's real lover, who also has designs upon the anklet. Pokes manages to secure the anklet from the Countess during the dance and hastens to conceal his ill-gotten spoils. When the Countess discovers the loss of her jewel, the Ginks summon the police, who insist upon all the guests submitting to a rigid search.

Pokes hears the call for the police and breaks into trembling and perspiration for fear of arrest. Suddenly thinking that now would be the time to get even with his detested rival, and at the same time cover up his theft, he slips the anklet into Jabbs' coat pocket. With fiendish glee Pokes awaits the moment when the police will find the anklet in Jabbs' pocket, but the latter discovering the stolen jewel in time, in turn slips it into the pocket of Rattles. The crook knowing that should the police discover him among the guests, they would immediately arrest him, manages to make his escape after first telling Ethel to meet him in the garden prepared to elope.

While waiting for Ethel he discovers the anklet in his pocket. The police learning that Rattles had been a guest at the party, throw up their hands in despair and inform the Countess that her precious anklet is now beyond recovery. Seeking some victim upon whom he can vent his wrath, Gink turns his attention upon the unfortunate Pokes and Jabbs and chases them out of the house, and they are once again broke and homeless.

WHAT'S SAUCE FOR THE GOOSE (April 27).—The cast: Mr. Boob Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); Mrs. Boob (Elsie MacLeod).

Mrs. Boob was pretty; Boob himself was a good-looking chap and each loved the other to distraction. Naturally, this state of affairs gives an opening for the entrance of the Green Demon. Boob was busy, so busy that he could not get home till late. Meeting with a very cold reception, the meal is disturbed by the telephone's chirpy call. His better half answers and is astonished to hear a woman's voice inquiring for Boob. He explains that it is the janitress telling him that he has left the safe open and leaves for his office. Wifey, now aroused, decides to follow him, and putting on a suit of hubby's clothes, sallies forth. Her departure is noticed by the returning husband who is mystified at the sight of a strange man leaving his house.

Hastily entering he calls for wifey. No reply forthcoming his worst fears are realized and he dresses in wifey's clothes and the hunt commences. Wifey, breathless seated and enters a cafe. Here she is molested by a couple of toughs whose cupidity is aroused at the sight of her money. Boob, thirsty by now, stops into the cafe and his manhood aroused at the sight of the cowardly dastardly-looking boy becoming the victim of the crooks, he follows after them. Choosing a quiet spot, the two pounce upon wifey. But Boob with a good right and left scatters them off. The heat of battle passed, both look but know what to do. However, he lures the amused fainting stranger and makes tracks for home. Arrived at last, recognition takes place and a darkness falls, all else is forgotten in the joy of reconciliation.

THE RIVALS (April 28).—The cast: Pokes (Rob Burns); Jabbs (Walter Stull); Lumber King (Frank Hanson); His Daughter (Ethel Burton); His Wife (Helen Gibson).

Pokes hears the latter chunky of Jabbs, his foreman at the lumber yard where he is employed by wooing the affections of Ethel, the employer's daughter. To get revenge, Jabbs orders the unfortunate Pokes to carry one of the heaviest logs he can find from one end of the lumber yard to the other. The terrible weight causes Pokes to bend almost double, and when Ethel and her father arrive and find him in this condition they are forced to use a heavy rope to straighten him out.

Later when Jabbs is discovered in a drinking bout by the Lumber King he is discharged from his position and Pokes is appointed foreman in his stead. Believing that turn about is fair play, Pokes now commands Jabbs to carry the same log that he had struggled with a few hours before. Smarting under the humiliation caused by his discharge, Jabbs plots with two of his confederates to kidnap Ethel. After knocking Pokes unconscious, Jabbs and his men throw Ethel into her father's auto and drive off. Recovering from the blow, Pokes seizes a bicycle and starts in pursuit of the fleeing auto. He overtakes the car and, scrambling aboard, hurls the conspirators and Jabbs over the side and down an embankment. Not being familiar with the mechanism of the auto Pokes harnesses himself to the front and drags the car back to the lumber yard. Desperate at being balked in his nefarious scheme, Jabbs orders his confederates to plant a bomb in the pocket of Pokes' coat. Discovering the smoke issuing from his clothes and not knowing the cause Pokes dashes after Jabbs and his men who seek safety in the powder house. Pokes dives into the house after them, and immediately after the bomb exploding, the entire house with Jabbs and his men are blown skyward. Pokes drops safely to the ground after shaking himself from the branches of a tree, where he has lodged and, viewing the ruins of the powder house, hies himself back to Ethel and his well earned reward.

POWERS.

A FAMILY AFFAIR (April 29).—The cast: Tony (Bob Vernon); Pedro (Fred Adrath); Papinta (Carmen Phillips); Mamma (Lule Warrentown); R. R. Bill (Eddie Boland). Written and produced by Clarence G. Badger.

Tony and Pedro work on the railroad. They are two rollicking comrades, living together in happy harmony, that is, until Papinta and her mamma come to live nearby. Both men lose their heads immediately over the beautiful Papinta. Their comradeship receives a decided strain.

Both undertake to woo Papinta. She shows preference for Tony, but mamma is avaricious. "The one who pays me the most money may woo my daughter." Now Pedro has always been treasurer for Tony and himself. The proceeds of their labors were saved in one sock. Pedro carried the sock. Jealous of Tony, Pedro now hands over the money of their partnership. Mamma orders heart-broken Tony about his business.

Pedro's gift makes him stand in right with mamma, but not with Papinta, who makes this fact known to him mighty emphatically. She also makes known her preference for Tony. Pedro seeks revenge on his late comrade. His chance comes. The gang are busy constructing a railroad. A ninety-pound rail falls on poor Tony's foot. He is carried home and the doctor is obliged to fasten the bandaged foot suspended by a rope from a rafter "to keep the blood down."

Pedro takes advantages of Tony's dilemma to continue his wooing of Papinta. Tony rages and only makes his position the more uncomfortable. While Tony is lying flat on his back, "Railroad Bill," a notorious freight car thief, comes sneaking in. Bill does not hesitate to loot to his heart's content. But he reckons unwisely and comes within reach of Tony, who promptly clutches him, and yells for the police. The police hear and come. Papinta, mamma and Pedro also hear and come. Bill is captured.

A handsome reward has been posted for Bill's capture. This reward is turned over to the delighted Tony, who loses no time flashing it before mamma. It certainly puts him in right. Pedro is disconsolate, and is about to do something rash when mamma stops him. He gets an idea and proposes to mamma, who accepts. So they make it a family affair. Tony and Papinta are dancing for joy, when Tony suddenly discovers that his hurt foot is perfectly healed.

GOLD SEAL.

THE OTHER HALF (Two parts—April 25.)—The cast: Blackie Connors (G. Raymond Nye); Charles Walden, Sr. (L. M. Wells); Charles Walden, Jr. (Paul Byron); Elizabeth Connors (Roberta Wilson); Detective Cullison (Hector Sarno); Chaperone (Helen Wright). Written by W. B. Pearson. Produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Blackie Connors, king of his bit of the underworld has a daughter whom he has placed under the guidance of a social chaperone. Charles Walden a real estate operator, deriving his big take off from rentals of the underworld, has a son who is about to marry Blackie's daughter. The father stops the marriage, saying: "In every woman's life there is something which if known would ruin her matrimonial chances." He gets a detective to find the flaw in Miss Connors' reputation.

Blackie pays a visit to his daughter just as she has received a note from Mr. Walden breaking the engagement. Blackie gets the services of Tumbler Lustie safe expert, and through a stool in Walden's office, obtains the desired information. He has Tumbler go to Walden's office. They obtain admission and Tumbler gets a book from the safe.

Blackie goes to Walden's home in the early morning and confronts him with the rental account book, saying "Why, you're a bigger crook than I am. We down there even support you up here." The picture closes with Blackie back in his dive reading the wedding announcement of his daughter to Charles Walden, Jr., while the father of the girl is engaged in diplomatic service abroad.

BILL'S NARROW ESCAPE (Two parts—April 26.)—The cast: The Husband (Billie Ritchie); His Wife (Eva Nelson); The Actress (Louise Orth); The Director (Gene Rogers).

Bill works in the kitchen of his wife's boarding house. She decides to become a movie queen, while Bill also has caught the infection and believes some day he will be a matinee idol. A proud hour it is for her when a picture com-

A wadding from one of the actor's revolvers hits Bill and when he hears a volley he imagines a riot has broken out and drives the company away. His wife explains and the director remains for dinner. Bill makes love to a boarder who is a movie queen and she tells him he should go in the movies. The director engages the wife to pose and Billie impersonates a dummy in order to get into the studio.

He breaks up numerous scenes and has many exciting adventures. The studio is soon in a turmoil. Wild excitement and humorous mishaps ensue. Finally Bill and his wife are blown up in the air by an accidental explosion. When they land outside the studio walls they decide studio life is interesting, but too exciting and decide to return to the boarding house and never enter a studio door again.

THE UNEXPECTED (April 25.).—The cast: Betty (Grace Cunard); Mexican Foreman (Francis Ford); Betty's Sweetheart (Jack Holt). Written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford.

Betty starts out for a walk and is warned by her swetheart and his friends to be careful as there are likely to be bandits about. She laughingly tells them she is not afraid, as she has her dog with her, who will be ample protection. During her stroll Betty finds a shack and decides to investigate. She notes there is a sign on the door, but it is covered with a coat. A Mexican enters and speaks in Spanish to her. She is unable to understand and he cannot understand English.

The Mexican is joined by some of his countrymen and their gestures and strange actions give Betty quite a fright. Betty discovers the house contains a lot of dynamite and explosives and decides that she is in the hands of bandits. Their peculiar actions strengthen this belief and she decides to make a rush for the door. They have quite a rough and tumble scrap, and the Mexicans are getting the worst of it, when one of them finally pushes Betty in a side room and locks her in. She finds the window barred.

Betty peeps through the keyhole and sees the men getting dynamite and decides they are going to blow her up. She is frantic, but when her dog shows his face at the window she hits upon a scheme to escape. Hastily writing a note she ties it to the dog's collar and sends him to find her sweetheart. Meanwhile Betty sees the men light the fuse and hurry away. The dog runs back to the boys and they find the note. Hastily piling into a machine, they dash to her rescue. On the way they meet some soldiers and tell of the captive girl.

The soldiers join the rescuers. The boys get Betty out and just as they leave the house the explosion takes place nearby. As the boys start towards the Mexicans a white man comes on and asks the trouble. The boys tell of the captive girl and the man breaks into laughter. He explains the Mexicans are section laborers and locked Betty in the house, fearing she would not understand them and wander near where they were blowing up some rocks. Betty gladly joins her sweetheart and allows the boys to take her home, claiming she has had all the exercise she wants.

CHICKEN-HEARTED JIM (April 27.).—The cast: Chicken-Hearted Jim (Francis Ford); Jib (Cecil McLean); Her Father (Phil Kelly); The Mate (Pat Ford). Scenario and production by Francis Ford.

Jimmie Endicott, a young man of well-to-do parents, worries his father and mother with his nightly debauches. One night at the club, while intoxicated, he strikes a waiter with his cane, and, thinking he has killed him, he decides to leave town. His wanderings through the city take him to the lower part of the shipping district. Every policeman he sees he thinks is following him. As a last resort he climbs aboard a schooner as it is about to sail.

Feeling secure on board the apparently deserted ship, he falls asleep under some canvas. On awakening in the morning he finds that the ship is far out at sea. He is brutally treated by the mate, whose actions are resented by Jib, the captain's daughter. Later he picks up a paper telling about the waiter's recovery. Finding that he is not guilty of murder, he decides to return. He is laughed at by all of the men and the brutal sailors. He even offers to buy the ship if they will return. The crew laugh at him all the more when he finds he has no money. The only one who believes his story is little Jib.

Remembering his temper, Jim permits the sailors to treat him brutally, which gives him the name of "Chicken-hearted Jim." Jim resents this treatment, finding him a gentleman and quite different from the rough sailors.

A few days later the sailors plan to steal the ship and go to an island where one of the men knows where a treasure is hidden. Jim wakes up one morning to find the captain and his daughter lashed to the mast. Jim, single-handed, gets the best of the crew and releases the captain and daughter. Jim's kindness is rewarded by a happy marriage and a happy return home.

THEIR ANNIVERSARY (April 30.).—The cast: Mr. Osborne (Ben Wilson); Mrs. Osborne (Dorothy Phillips); Insurance Agent (Charles Ogle). Scenario by Samuel Greiner. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborne, a young married couple, have reached the first anniversary of their wedding. Mrs. Osborne wonders if hubby will remember it. The scene shifts to Mr. Osborne's office. His mother calls him up and says, "Don't you know, son, that this is the day of the anniversay of your wedding?" Osborne is apparently surprised and picks up the calendar to verify his mother's statement. He then wonders if his wife recalls the memorable event.

Presently we see Osborne at a jeweler's store, where he picks out a beautiful lavaliere, and, paying the stipulated price, puts it in his pocket. On his arrival home, he comes to the conclusion that he will wait until his wife mentions the anniversary. Mrs. Osborne has the same idea and conceals the diamond studded cuff-links she has purchased for hubby, so that it now simmers down to a case of "watchful waiting." At dinner the situation gets embarrassing, as no mention is made of the anniversary by either of them. They both get out of sorts, and Osborne returns to the office in a very bad humor. Each is convinced that the other is growing indifferent.

A persistent insurance agent calls on Osborne and is almost thrown out of the office. Osborne cools off after awhile, and telephones to wifey that he wishes her to come downtown and take dinner with him, but she reminds him that they have accepted an invitation to attend a party that evening. He reluctantly consents to accompany her. On his arrival home, they both proceed to dress for the party. Osborne loses his collar-button, and finds a button missing on the vest of his dress suit. He accuses his wife of neglecting him shamefully. This leads to a domestic quarrel and finally Osborne declines to accompany his wife to the party, telling her that he is going to the club, while she drives off all by herself in a great huff. After both have proceeded on their respective ways for a while, their better nature asserts itself. Osborne accuses himself of being too hard on the poor thing, as he had forgotten the anniversary himself, while wifey, in thinking it over, comes to the conclusion that hubby must have forgotten the event in the rush of business.

Both return home—he to put the lavaliere on her dresser and she to put her present on his chiffonier. In endeavoring to carry out this plan of campaign they bunk against each other in the hall. Osborne turns on the light, and they look at each other in blank amazement, each trying to hide their respective present. Then Osborne's face brightens up with an understanding of the situation. He shows wifey the lavaliere; she exhibits the cuff-links and flies into his arms, both exclaiming at the same time. "And you didn't forget." There is a tender reconciliation as the picture fades out.

BILLY'S WAR BRIDES (April 25).—The cast: Billy (William Garwood); Banyshnia Waslowa (Sonia Marcelle); Mlle. Fifine (Molly Gilmore); Fraulein Wildschnabl (Elsie Earl); Yo San (Tokura Tsuda). Written by Samuel Greiner. Produced by William Garwood.

Billy reads the following caption in the newspaper: "Polygamy Will Be Legalized After the War." As he is by nature a lady-lover, the idea of owning a harem, transports him with delight. After the war is over, and polygamy well established, we see that he has ordered four wives of different nationalities from the marriage broker. The broker picks for him a ponderous German, a bony Russian, a hobble-skirted French woman, and a diminutive Japanese.

All of them speak their respective language fluently, but can't speak a word of English. As each one avows her love in a different tongue, and, as a man is gifted with but one pair of knees for wives to sit on, he finds himself right at the beginning in somewhat cramped positions. His wives, moreover, insist on doing their own cooking, and each one eagerly prepares her favorite national dish or beverage. The German has wienerwurst and sauerkraut, The French some other abomination plentifully spiced with pepper and salt, the Mongolian her chop suey and the Russian her tea and vodka.

In order not to arouse their jealousy, he partakes alternately of each dish and is seized with a murderous attack of colic. His wives are not at a loss for a remedy. They immediately rush out to prepare it. But he seizes the opportunity to effect his escape—at least he makes a vain attempt in that direction, but whichever way he turns, his path is waylaid by a wife returning with her remedy. They force four different samples down his throat, and when, as a result of too much health, he falls violently ill, each insists on his getting a doctor of her own nationality.

Four physicians soon arrive and begin to diagnose the various portions of his anatomy. Things look black for Billy. He pretends to be cured, however, and after much ado routs the health-cures. His troubles, however, are just commencing. They reach their climax when he is about to become a father. After having ordered four cribs, he makes the horrifying discovery that his wives have blessed him with nine offerings.

He decides that it is high time to give up the life terrestial and try heaven for a change. He places the revolver against his temple and fires. Instead of reaching the realms of eternal bliss, Billy awakes and discovers himself sprawling in an upturned chair, his hands still grasping newspaper. It has all been a dream, but at any rate he is cured of his multiple-wife tendencies.

WHY MRS. KENTWORTH LIED (Three Parts—April 28).—The cast: Eben Kentworth (Joseph Floris); Mrs. Kentworth (Jane Gail); Ralph (Matt Moore); Quentin Quinby (Augustus Phillips); Police Detective (Howard Crampton). Scenario by Norbert Lusk. Produced by Matt Moore.

For the young wife of an elderly millionaire to be found at midnight beside the open library safe, with her husband wounded and unconscious, and a smoking revolver between them, with her collection of jewels gone, looked bad for the wife. Quentin Quinby, the detective, thought so, too, but when retained by the lawyer of the millionaire to quietly investigate the case, he set about learning the truth.

For this purpose he first consulted his card index and learned that Eben Kentworth, the husband, had married some years before his present wife, then a well known chorus girl and model, with a score of love affairs behind her. Mr. Quinby then secured the vacant post of butler and in his disguise was enabled to see and hear everything.

He did not know that on the day of the attempted murder, Mrs. Kentworth had received a threatening note which caused her agitation. So alarmed did she become that after the departure of her husband on a business trip, she telephoned to the writer of the note—a man in Room 37 of the Eureka Hotel—making an appointment with him in her library. She opened the window and awaited the coming of her caller. He renewed his threats and demanded money and when Mrs. Kentworth told him her husband had left her nothing, the man offered to take her jewels in lieu of cash.

Frightened and desperate, Mrs. Kentworth let him enter the safe and apparently rob her of the gems that night. To this the man agreed. Upstairs Mrs. Kentworth lies in bed, her eyes fastened upon her wrist watch, waiting for the "robbery" to be despatched. Mr. Kentworth makes an unexpected return for a forgotten document, and discovers the robber. Mrs. Kentworth hears the succeeding shot and fall. Of course, she knows the identity of the thief, although he had hardly been seen by the millionaire.

Later Mrs. Kentworth tries to convince the score of detectives and policeman that she knows nothing, but they are skeptical. Meanwhile Quinby, the butler, becomes active. During Mrs. Kentworth's "third degree" in the library, he listens at the door and when she is driven nearly to madness, Quinby quietly enters with his silver tray and says: "Beg pardon, ma'am, don't worry—right will come right."

Meanwhile thhe thief telephones from his hotel demanding of Mrs. Kentworth money—cash—with which to get away. Every pawnshop is watched. Mrs. Kentworth controls herself as she answers and appears to be replying to some society friend.

When she later encloses bills in an envelope and finds she cannot leave the house because it is watched, she entrusts her delicate errand to the discreet new butler. Quinby lends her his pencil as she jots on the envelope, "Room 37, Eureka Hotel." Quinby is allowed to pass by the detectives. He then telephones to the hotel room, announcing to the thief that Mrs. Kentworth's messenger will meet him at a certain place. Quinby enters the room of the thief during his absence, finds the missing jewels in a leather-covered whisky flask and confronts the man when he returns. Quinby shows himself master and, strange to say, the fellow seems willing to go with Quinby. He says to the detective, "Sure I'll go to Kentworths'—but it won't be me that'll suffer most." This makes it appear that his entry into the house was not altogether a surprise.

Mr. Kentworth has regained consciousness and his young wife is lavishing her devotion upon him, while in the library the detectives are waiting for the warrant for her arrest. Mr. Quinby gets in with his man through the servants' entrance and takes him to the sick room. Mrs. Kentworth sees their arrival and rushes to the door in fear. Mr. Quinby asks her if the jewels are hers. She dumbly nods acquiescence. The man regards her contemptuously. Quinby takes them both over to the millionaire's bedside. Quinby asks Mr. Kentworth if he knows the man before him, at the same time making clear that the jewels were found in his possession. The old man gasps, "Yes my nephew!"

It is all clear now to Quinby. Mrs. Kentworth passes the note to her husband which explains everything. the nephews threats to get what he imagined would have been his but for the marriage of his uncle to the former chorus girl, etc. Kentworth realizes his wife did all this to save him the humiliation of dealing with his nephew. At this moment detectives burst in with the warrant. Quinby conceals Ralph behind the screen, and calmly announces that as the jewels have been recovered, the complaint has been dropped.

They demand to know what business it is of the butler's. Mr. Quinby hands them his card. "Adjuster of Personal Difficulties," he calls himself. Quinby later brings Ralph out and gives him the choice of leaving the country or remaining to face the charge of attempted murder. It is clear that Ralph chooses the former course. Mr. Kentworth thanks Quinby.

NESTOR.

HIS WOODEN LEG (April 24).—The cast: Mr. Newlywed (Ray Gallaghen). His Wife (Billie Rhodes); The Major (George French). Written by Floyd Byrnes. Produced by Horace Davey.

The Newlyweds are a happy couple; but one day their quiet home life is interrupted by the receipt of a letter from hubby's uncle, an old major, who informs him that because of his old age, he is coming to stay with them and that they can wait on him. The boy tells his wife that the major has served in many battles and is reported to be very wealthy. The old man, however, has a wooden leg having lost that member during one of his brave campaigns.

Uncle arrives and is given the room of state. No matter how hard the Newlyweds try, they cannot please him. With an eye to the future, Newlywed and his wife accept all kinds of indignities from the old man, rather than fall out with him. He becomes quite angry at them, and, claiming he is insulted, leaves the house in a rage.

Several months pass and Newlywed receives notification of his uncle's death. He and his wife comment on the old man's passing away, but they think that because of his leaving them in anger, they will hardly be remembered in his will. However, when the will is read, the nephew is remembered. The major leaves him his most treasured possession—the wooden leg—and it is some legacy.

When the boys at the office hear of Fred's good luck, they make life miserable for him, and his day is one long round of answering questions about the wooden legacy. The thing gets upon his nerves, and he determines to get rid of it. No matter how hard he tries, the leg always comes home, and he is in despair.

One day he decides on a bright scheme to dispose of the wooden leg, and wrapping it up carefully, he boards a street car and leaves it on the car. The police, meanwhile, are looking for a crook who had a wooden leg, and notice is sent out to be on the watch for a man with a wooden leg. A woman has seen Newlywed get off the car and leave the package, and she follows him home in order to give it back to him. A policeman sees him with the wooden leg, determines he is the man wanted, and takes him in. Poor Fred is arrested, but on the way to the station, the policeman meets a companion who has the man with a wooden leg in charge, and they find out that Fred is not the man they want.

In disgust Fred slams the woden leg down on the sidewalk and it breaks. The interior is filled with money, which scatters all over the sidewalk. Mrs. Newlywed comes up and assists in gathering in the legacy, and Fred explains to the cops that his uncle was a great old fellow to remember them so kindly. He and his wife leave for home, and they decide to keep the remnants of the wooden leg as a remembrance of their dearly beloved uncle.

Eddie is jealous of his bride for no reason whatever. He is always getting himself in trouble flirting that his wife is receiving attentions from other men and one day he calls down a party that he wife is talking to on the phone only to find out it is the grocer man taking an order. Eddie leaves home with a friend and all at the office is made miserable for those who come in contact with him.

Betty writes a note to Percy telling him she is glad to hear so is coming to visit her. She tells him he will hardly know the little girl he used to love and kiss, and that she still loves him as much as ever. She receives an invitation from her sister to come over and hear some good news and leaves the letter lying on the table. Her sister tells her that their brother will arrive that day, and the two begin to prepare for his welcome. Eddie, repentant for his unjust suspicions, decides to return home and surprise his wife. In this forgiving state of mind he finds the note and reads it. This is too much. He determines to leave his wife, and starts packing up his possessions. Betty returns at this moment and her husband refuses to explain his conduct. She then threatens that her brother would make short work of Eddie if he knew the treatment she was receiving, and Eddie proceeds to tell her all he has heard since their marriage to "her fiancé."

Betty attempts to leave the house too, and there are lively times in portioning off the furnishings of the home. The brother arrives and goes to Stella's home. He calls up Betty to tell her of his arrival and hears Betty and Eddie quarreling over their possessions. He determines to call Eddie down for treating the girl so and taking her to task, hurries to the house. As he arrives, Betty has just told Eddie that she will tell her brother of his treatment, and Eddie bravely states that it is a good thing "brother is not present."

When Eddie sees what a big man the brother is he regrets his hasty statement and is on the verge of retreat when Betty runs to the man, exclaiming "Brother Percy!" Before Eddie realizes that "Percy" was the name on the letter, he has been pretty severly handled, and he is willing to forgive and forget the past. He tells Percy that he has been unjustly suspicious of his wife, but then she was such a pretty girl no one could hardly blame him.

JOKER.

THE JITNEY DRIVER'S ROMANCE (April 29).—The cast: Jacob Mott (Milburn Moranti); Sarah Mott (Gale Henry); Zimariah (William Franey); Skinner (Charles Conklin); Miss Buffum (Lillian Peacock). Scenario by William Wright Farmer. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Jacob Mott, a traction magnate, finds profits on the wane when the jitney busses come to town. Zimariah Gusset, a taxi driver, thinking to win Mott's daughter, tells him he expects to get rich by starting a jitney line. Mott drives him away.

Zim is broken-hearted, but finds some solace in his secret meetings with Sarah Mott, who does not share her father's views. Mott reads an ad., telling of the Non-Skid Matrimonial Agency's demand for a wealthy heiress to wed a titled nobleman, and he makes application for a titled husband for Sarah. Skinner & Buffum, owners of the Non-Skid agency, decide to bleed the traction magnate. Skinner disguises as a Hindoo prince, and notifies Mott that Prince Hadda Mojay of Bombay, India, will call upon him shortly. Sarah objects and she tells Zim.

Zim reads a news item telling of an escaped lunatic who imagines he is heir to a throne. Zim hits on a clever plan. The prince arrives, and Zim is at the depot to meet him. The prince is loaded in a taxi by a clever ruse and taken to the police station. Zim turns him over as the escaped lunatic. He is put into a padded cell.

Pete Washington, a negro porter, out of a job, hits Zim for a lift. Zim hires Pete to assist him. Pete and two colored boys are dressed in typical South Sea Island style. Pete is provided with a spear, while the boys, who are to act as his servants, carry fans. Pete is to call on Mott and Sarah as Prince Hadda Mojay. At the proper time Pete and his outfit appear before the expectant Mr. Mott and Miss Sarah.

When Mott sets eyes on the outfit he almost faints. Sarah, unaware of the game, is completely overcome. Pete claims Sarah as his bride. Mott, in anger, declares "My Daughter shall never marry such a monstrosity." Pete gets mad and, shoving his spear under Mott's vest, he declares, "She marry me or I will kill you." Zim gets on the job and performs a most heroic feat. The dusky prince lays prostrate on the floor, while Zim with foot upon the breast of the conquered, gazes at the surprised Mr. Mott. Sarah rushes to Zim's arms, while her father grabs his hand in humble appreciation.

Meanwhile, Pat Moran is stung by the Non-Skid agency, and calls in a detective. Buffum is pinched. The detective learns of the mission of the absent Mr. Skinner and sets out to capture Prince Hadda Mojay. Just as Mott is about to give his blessing to Zim and Sarah, the detective appears on the scene and demands the prince. This was an unexpected development to Zim. Pete is about to tell what he knows when Zim plays a clever game in which he extricates himself as well as Pete, and Mr. Mott is none the wiser.

Skinner is brought before the detective and finds that instead of being released he is slated for a long journey. Pete is made happy when Zim provides him with a nice roll of pork chop fund. Zim goes back to Mott, receives the blessing of Mr. Mott, and is told that he is soon to be at the head of the traction trust. Poor father never knew that Zim saved him from the clutches of Skinner & Buffum.

LAEMMLE.

MISS BLOSSOM (Two Parts—April 27).—The cast: Colonel Wyndham Pepper (Alfred Allen); Emily Pepper (Myrtle Gonzalez); Mammy Chloe (Grace Marvin); Morris Prentiss (Fred Church), Shad (Val Paul). Written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Colonel Wyndham Pepper, owner of Flintridge plantation, and his granddaughter, Emily, live in the big house, which is made pleasant by the presence of the granddaughter. Morris Prentiss, Emily's cousin, has long admired her, but she refuses to consider him seriously. It is springtime and the Colonel is having some needed repairs done at Emily's suggestion. Both are happy with the promise of the coming year, even Uncle Josh and Aunt Chloe.

Prentiss is interested in racing stock and his cruelty to horses is notorious. Uncle Josh remarked to Aunt Chloe that a man who mistreats a horse would likely mistreat a wife the same way. Prentiss again presses his suit to Emily and being refused, declares some day she will be glad to accept him. In the mountains lives Shad, whose father is a worthless moonshiner, and Shad is often thrown upon his own resources. Angered by his father's actions, and particularly because his father prefers feeding his dogs rather than him, Shad leaves the old shack for the city, determined to acquire an education. Emily meets Shad on the way and, sympathizing with him, takes him to the plantation, where she furnishes him with some old clothes.

For two days Shad has eaten nothing substantial and, thinking he is unseen, eats some of the dogs' scraps. Colonel Pepper sees the incident and orders the old servant to give the boy a big meal. The Colonel and Emily learn Shad's ambitions and the tender-hearted girl suggests to her grandfather that she will share part of her allowance to help him. The old man offers to double what Emily suggests. Shad is bashful about accepting, but, seeing how earnest they are, thanks them, and after promising to faithfully return the loan, leaves for school.

Before leaving, Shad and Prentiss have hot words over the latter's mistreatment of a horse. Next spring, because of the low price of the prevailing crops, Flintridge has a hard time. Colonel Pepper finds it necessary to mortgage the old home. Prentiss buys the mortgage. Shad succeeds at school and stops to remind the Peppers that he hasn't forgotten their kindness. The Peppers are giving a little entertainment and Prentiss and Emily have wandered off together. Prentiss is forcing his attentions upon the girl when Shad comes upon the scene. He comes to her rescue and although Prentiss knocks him down, Shad restrains his anger and refuses to fight. After telling the girl to remind her grandfather of his progress, Shad leaves.

During his short vacation he has made more than enough money to run him through the coming term. One day he receives a letter from Colonel Pepper and Emily, enclosing $50. In order to help the boy acquire an education, the old Colonel sacrifices some of his personal possessions. The thought of the Colonel's kindness moves Shad, whose life has been a series of kicks and fights. He returns the money as well as the amount of the original loan and addresses it to Emily.

Prentiss, meanwhile, has threatened to foreclose the mortgage unless Emily marries him. Colonel Pepper leaves the matter to Emily alone. She overhears their talk and realizing what the loss would be, agrees to marry Prentiss. Thinking she is alone in the house, Emily gives way to her tears and is discovered by her grandfather, who says that rather than force her into the marriage he will lose the home.

Prentiss stops at the mail-box one day and discovers a note to Emily, opens it, reads Shad's letter, tears it up and pockets the money. He forges the signature on the check and when the check returns marked paid, Shad wonders why he receives no answer.

Years later Shad becomes a successful business man and again pays a visit to the old home of his childhood. He stops at the plantation and talks with Uncle Josh, who tells him the Colonel and his granddaughter have moved to a smaller place and that the plantation now belongs to Prentiss. He finally recognizes Shad and, becoming talkative, states that Emily had often wondered at his silence, which was not strange to the old negro, as he knew Prentiss got the mail and suspected that he would destroy any letters to Emily. Shad can restrain his dislike for Prentiss no longer and, seeing the latter nearby, accuses him of forging the check. He threatens that unless Prentiss will sell the plantation to him for a reasonable figure, he will prosecute him.

Prentiss, realizing he has been discovered, agrees to sell the place to Shad, and Shad leaves to tell the Colonel and Emily of his new purchase and to suggest that they share it with him.

BIG U.

LONESOME HOUSE (April 26).—The cast: Ezra Henshaw (Thomas Jefferson); Myra Walton (Julia Jackson); Bessie (Zoe Bech); Priscilla Watts (Jessie Arnold). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by George Cochrane.

In the remote village of Hazleton lives Myra Walton, an old maid; Bessie, her niece, a little gir of five years; Priscilla Watts, leader of the church sewing society, and the usual coterie of kindred souls. Miss Walton has inherited a small fortune, and a modest competency on which she lives. When she first comes to the village she is called upon by Priscilla Watts, and is invited to attend a meeting of the village sewing society. She does so, taking her niece with her. During the meeting, she is quizzed regarding her religion, and when it is discovered that she does not belong to any church, she is immediately snubbed. From that time on, she lives a solitary life, keeping to her home and seldom going out, except to buy her supplies.

Priscilla Watts starts gossip about her, and states that anyone who does not attend church is ungodly, and must have sinned. This leads to Myra's being snubbed the more, and her life is a lonely one. Ezra Henshaw, an old school teacher comes to town. Bessie is a member of the school, and the day Ezra takes charge, the scholars misbehave, though the old man tries to maintain order. One of the little boys is particularly impish, and Ezra is obliged to use the old fashioned methods to check him. Little Bessie is somewhat of an imp herself, but not against the teacher, whom she likes at the start. They become good friends, and the old man soon learns to love her. He inquires about her home, but she is reticent, owing to the instructions of her aunt, who is sore at heart against the villagers because of their treatment of her. Ezra never visits her home, though he often walks part of the way with her on the return from school.

One of the little boys falls in love with Bessie, and their baby love affair is a source of amusement to the old man. Little Bobbie gives her everything he can. Sometimes it is an apple, and sometimes a nosegay he picks in the fields. Bobbie visits her home and is received not unkindly by her aunt, until his mother learns of it and rebukes him. Hence Myra Walton keeps more to herself. One evening Bessie is hurt while see-sawing with Bobbie, and there is no one to take her home. Ezra is obliged to do so himself. He carries her in his arms, and when Myra sees him coming she is struck speechless. She timidly opens the door while he carries Bessie inside and lays her on a couch. Neither speaks to the other, but start to busy themselves with Bessie, who has sprained her ankle. When she is put to bed, her ankle bandaged, Ezra and Myra are left alone. Each recognizes the other as a sweetheart of former years. Myra is cold and distant to him, and asks him why he never came to her that night so long ago. The scene fades out to the time of their youth, when Ezra was a young man just beginning his career as a teacher. They were engaged. School funds were missed, and Ezra was dismissed in disgrace. He was ashamed to go to his sweetheart, though he was innocent; and her father forbade him to see her. She did write him, but the letter was never delivered, her father destroying it, a fact she learned afterward. Thus he thought that she believed him guilty. His innocence was proven when the shortage was discovered to be an error in the bookkeeping of the supervisors. It was too late then.

The scene fades back to the present, and he learns that she still cares for him, and in a moment they are in each other's arms. As he leaves her house that night, the village gossip, Priscilla Watts, sees him and spreads the "scandal." But it is all in vain, for the old teacher and the old maid leave the town with little Bessie, and are married. He has saved his money and has a small fund in the bank, and she has her means. In addition, she sells the house and they take up a home in a new town.

BISON.

THE TORRENT OF VENGEANCE (Two Parts—April 29).—The cast: Judson Bigelow (E. N. Wallock); David Bigelow (Lee Hill); Jacob Dunsmore (Jack Curtis); Mary Dunsmore (Ora Carew); Sam Sargent (H. Barrington). Scenario by F. M. Wiltermood. Produced by Henry McRae.

Judson Bigelow is the venerable founder and builder of Bigelow City, which lies in a valley at the foot of the mountains. Bigelow presides at the municipal dedication ceremonies and makes a speech of thanks, after which his son, David, addresses the celebrators. Several citizens of Dunsmore, the rival town, witness the merrymaking and return to Dunsmore and consult with Jacob Dunsmore, the wealthy owner of nearly all the land in that town. They tell Dunsmore that something must be done to head off the fast-growing population of Bigelow City, or its success will cause many of the Dunsmore people to move to Bigelow City and thus depreciate Dunsmore land values. Dunsmore bestows gifts on his only child, Mary, a beautiful maiden, and she curbs his bitter words against his enemy, John Bigelow. Mary is secretly in love with David Bigelow. They meet clandestinely.

Judson visits his municipal water dam, surprises the constructing engineer, Sam Sargent, and finding him drinking whiskey, dismisses him. The latter departs threating "to get even." Sargent goes to Dunsmore, unfolds a plot to dynamite the water dam when the winter rain sets in, and thus cause a flood that would ruin Bigelow City. Dunsmore agrees to the scheme and pays him for his nefarious work.

When winter sets in, Sargent goes to the water dam and blows it up with dynamite, thus releasing a lake of water made by the heavy rains. A passerby, a man on horseback, sees the dam in ruins and hurries to warn the people of Bigelow City. His horse falls, and he meets David and Mary in an auto, who take him to Bigelow. The flood outraces them, and when they arrive they find the people in water waist deep, placing bags of earth to divert the stream from the town, and the chanel runs to Dunsmore, whereupon the Dunsmore people protest and a free fight results between the rival townsmen. Sargent and his evil friend, Charley Stoneman, lead the Dunsmore citizens in their fight against the diversion of the flood waters. Then Sargent rushes to Dunsmore and tells him that the Bigelow people are bent on destroying the town of Dunsmore.

Mary and her father are caught in the flood but manage to clamber onto a floating house. Sargent and Charley, on horses, try to make the steeds carry them across the river, but the horses founder and throw the two men off, and they float down the rushing waters.

David saves his father from drowning and then hastens in search of Mary, having sighted her and her father on the house floating. After thrilling attempts to rescue, David succeeds in rescuing Mary, but her father is carried away. They go in search of him and find him lodged against some debris, in a dying condition. Mary asks her father to bless her and David, which he does, exhorting them to lead righteous lives. Dunsmore dies.

David and Mary also find the bodies of Charley and Sargent. On their way back to Bigelow City they meet a party of men, led by Bigelow, out searching for David and Mary. They inform the young hero and his sweetheart that Bigelow City is safe, while the town of Dunsmore has been entirely destroyed.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

GRAFT (Episode No. 19, "The Photo Badger Game"—Two Parts—April 17).—The cast: Robert Harding (Richard Stanton); Stanford Stone (Glen White); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak).

A new form of grafting swindle has appeared among the wealthy and influential citizens, which is termed by the police "the photographic badger game." As the victims shun publicity and refuse to appear against the swindlers, it is difficult to convict the gang.

Mayor Harding learns that the badger workers are at a fashionable summer resort and determines to try his hand at rounding them up. Dorothy Maxwell is spending her summer at the beach and is delighted to see the mayor. Senator Biggs also is enjoying a brief vacation at the beach. He is the leader against the famous Ship Building Bill.

The badger gang have planned one of their biggest coups instigated by the war traffickers, a group of men interested in the big battleship building yards, who are trying to get legislation passed that will compel the government to buy battleships from them at a high figure. Senator Biggs has been their stumbling block and they are trying to get him in their power.

Harding saves the Senator's niece from the surf, and wins his confidence as well as his gratitude. Harding has suspected a Mrs. Renau, a lobbyist and supposed society leader, of being connected with the badger gang. He learns that the Senator is to call at her apartment that night to meet her daughter, who has just returned from her honeymoon. Harding induces the Senator to get in his limousine and take a ride with Dorothy Maxwell, while he investigates Mrs. Renau.

Stanford Stone, who is implicated with the war traffickers, has seen Harding at a distance, without being seen. Stone urges immediate action from the badger gang, and also plans a little revenge of his own. He bribes the chauffeur of the hired limousine to drive past the old Rook place that night—a deserted fishing shack on the rugged beach. Three of his men have been placed at the shack to hold up the machine.

Mrs. Renau, to supply an alibi, leaves the city suddenly and the "daughter" welcomes Harding when he calls, thinking him the Senator. The photo badger game is played successfully, and Harding escapes from the apartment conscious that he has not only foiled the plot against the Senator, but has obtained the evidence that will convict the gang. Meantime the Senator and Dorothy have been driven past the Rook place, the limousine has been held up and they have been dragged in the old shanty and tied to the walls while the thugs saturate the floor with kerosene. The thugs leave the place and later 'phone Stone that his orders have been carried out. Stone hurries to the place alone to see his victims before destroying them.

Harding later finds the frightened chauffeur outside the hotel and wrings from him a confession of the hold-up. At the point of a pistol he compels the man to drive him with all speed to the spot. Harding arrives at the old building in time to surprise Stone in the act of insulting the helpless Dorothy. Stone kicks over the lamp, the only light in the place, and the men fight a duel in the dark. Harding is wounded and Stone escapes, setting fire to the place before seeking safety in flight. Harding with difficulty rescues Dorothy and the Senator.

The next day when the badger workers and the war traffickers come to intimidate the Senator, they discover the wrong man has been photographed. The war traffickers retire defeated, and the badger gang are arrested. Stone has escaped, but the police force of the country are set on his trail.

RED FEATHER.

HER BITTER CUP (Five Parts—April 17).—The cast: Renthal (Cleo Madison); Mary McDougal (Adele Farrington); Henry Burke (Wm. Mong); Walter Burke (Edward Horne); foreman of factory (Ray Hanford); boarding house woman (Lule Warrenton). Written and produced by Cleo Madison.

Rethena is a girl of the tenements, living alone in her attic. Her whole soul's interest is given to the people of the slums, whose battles she fights. Her only aim in life is to gain justice for them from the powerful ones of the earth.

Rethna's determination to rise above her poverty causes her to find employment in a factory, owned by Henry Burke, a miser. He gives them harsh treatment and unsanitary conditions under which to work, and there is a growing spirit of rebellion among them. He has two grown sons, Harry and Walter. Harry is a he-dog-well and spendthrift, while Walter is of a different mold, a fine fellow, who has become a successful lawyer. Henry Burke wants his younger son to come into the business with him, but Walter refuses to be connected with the factory, under the existing conditions, and they have a quarrel, during which the father tells his son that he never wants to see his face again.

Rethna and the foreman of the factory are the instigators of the growing rebellion among the employes. One day one of the factory girls taunts Rethna and the foreman take her to Burke's office where Rethna begs the old man to prevent such occurrences in the future by giving the workers more sun and air. Burke refuses and discharges Rethna for her impertinence. Harry is present having come to ask his father for more money, and, attracted by the girl's spirit and beauty, he follows her and offers to help her. She accepts and later Rethna is seen presiding at gay parties in her beautiful apartments, but her heart is still with her people and she spends much time with them. Harry, driven to desperation by her unresponsiveness to his now real affection and his failure to provide the money she constantly demands, has begun to use morphine. His father has stopped supplying him with cash and he appeals to Walter, who has pity on him and gives him money.

Walter Burke now district attorney, goes down into the slums to "get a line on" a gang of toughs and is shot at by members of the gang. Rethna coming out of a tenement gets in range and is slightly wounded in the shoulder. Walter takes her to her home in his car and when he phones for a doctor she learns his name. Rethna immediately determines to finish the work she has begun by slaying Walter, as she did Harry if it is possible for this is one of the other ways by which she is going to "beat" Henry Burke. She recovers quickly from the wound and continues her activity in planning with the leaders the campaign against the factory owner. Walter's interest in her grows and about a month after their first meeting he proposes to her and she accepts him.

Some time later, married to Walter, who knows not exactly Rethna's identity, but nothing but good things of her suffering people. The marriage seems to her unbearably sad when she learns that Walter is on the side of those trying to crush her people, but finally thoughts of her people drive her from Walter's presence to see and succor them to life. She soon finally after leaving the tenement, meeting at the foot of the stairs in the dark Walter returns and the two go, leaving the coming steps out through a long window into a balcony. Walter enters the door to the tenement and sees the foreman standing at the foot of the stairs in the dark. He quickly runs on the roof where the burning rag stood and flames soon creep the stairs and cut the lives of women and children trying to get to the ground. Walter switches on the hall lights in the tenement and strikes on the balcony, but the foreman has fled. Walter demands an explanation but she refuses.

Later she is shown entering the factory with the foreman to make one last appeal to Burke to better conditions in the factory. He refuses to concede anything to them and the foreman orders the workers to walk out. The mob begin throwing stones at Burke who has come to the door, he retreats and throws for his son, Walter. The stones begin coming through the window and the old man fails with an attack of heart failure just as a brick strikes the oil stove, tipping it over and setting fire to the room. Rethna sees the smoke and runs into the building. She is trying to drag the old man out when Walter drives up and meets Rethna with his father. They take him out through the back window into Walter's car. As they are driving away a flying stone crashes through the car window and strikes Walter on the head. Rethna orders the driver to go to Walter's home. Walter isn't seriously injured and when he recovers Rethna tells him about herself. When Rethna has finished her story Walter is dumb with anguish to know that his wife had belonged to his brother.

Harry, at home, falls into a stupor and dreams that Rethna wanders down the hall and into the dining room. Harry has crept around the house and sees her through the window. He goes to the dining room door and demands entrance. When she lets him in he grabs her by the throat and forces her back against the wall, threatening to kill her. She is passive, not seeming to care what he does to her, even telling him to take her life. He grasps a candle stick on the sideboard to strike her with it, and as he pulls it toward him he overturns a box of nutpicks. One falls and sticks in the floor and as he sees this and Rethna, standing against the door with arms outstretched, he is struck with an insane idea. Grasping the candle stick and nutpick, he dreams that he nails her hands to the door and starts to nail her feet, but before he can do so the horror of his act comes over him and he staggers to his feet and rushes out. He wakes, horror-stricken at his vision.

Rethna has an accident in which both of her hands are badly burned. Her husband is absent, and during her convalescence she his leisure to miss him, and to realize that without his love the future holds nothing for her. He is suffering, too, and he also realizes that he cannot live without her. He returns to her, stopping on the way to see his father, who is weak and feeble, but says, with a smile, "I was all wrong, but I am all right now." Walter and his wife are reconciled, and decide to begin life anew.

THROWN TO THE LIONS (Five Parts—April 24).—The cast: Linnie Carter (Mary Fuller), Irma (Finita DeSopia); Harry Sullivan (Joe W. Girard), Billy Weed (Clifford Gray), Krotz (Emil Hick), Dist Atty. Bryce (Augustus Phillips). Scenario by Norbert Lusk.

Linnie Carter daughter of a country piano tuner, is again out of work because the musical show has failed. Her consumptive father needs every penny she can earn. Her friend, Irma, also of the chorus arranges with Krotz, the proprietor of a cheap drinking place to give both girls a try-out. They prove to be satisfactory and are given a job.

Linnie going out to register the letter to her father entrusting most of her first week's salary stumbles against the curb and falls to the street. A pleasant-faced young man helps her to her feet and offers to register the letter for her. Linnie looks at him and says she will. From the return card in the corner of the envelope the stranger learns Linnie's name and address. A newspaper extra announcing the assassination. Billy Weed a comedian at Krotz's sees it and knows that the "important" discovery linked at most concern the city politician who frequents Krotz's, and protects the proprietor when necessary. The man is Harry Sullivan. The paper says that District Attorney Bryce is about to make public the name of the district leader who is said to control the politics. Soda Joy Court and that prosecutions against the politician will be begun. Members of the gang who are at and take their cue. Even the dull stranger Linnie is filled reads it with absorbing interest.

That night Krotz comes to Linnie with a card. It is engraved "Mr. Harry Sullivan." Under the name is penned, "Will drop in tonight. Make it lively." "Put some pep in your work; you're just the sort Harry Sullivan likes," the proprietor tells Linnie. From watchful Billy Weed Linnie learns that Sullivan is the boss of the district and the worst man in the city. Later several men admire Linnie from their table in the cafe, and ask Krotz to send her to them. As she is wending her way to the men Linnie's stranger grasps her hand and draws her down to a seat beside him. Linnie is carried away by the stranger's eloquence and when he says, "I love you. You must marry me tonight," Linnie is so completely under his spell that she simply says she'll trust him. They go out. Billy Weed bursts in upon Irma and the other performers and cries, "Linnie's gone off with Harry Sullivan!"

Outside the cafe Billy Weed and Irma learn from a newsboy that Sulivan ordered his chauffeur to drive to a well-known roadhouse. They know what that means. Linnie must be saved. Cuneo, proprietor of the roadhouse, knows what is expected of him when Harry Sullivan, the stranger, brings the girl there. He produces a "clergyman" and the "marraige" takes place. Cuneo then ushers Sullivan and Linnie into a suite. Sullivan resumes his passionate declarations and Linnie is about to yield herself to him when the telephone rings. Sullivan is suddenly called to the District Attorney's office. He knows what it means, and on account of the tremendous issues involved, knows he must go. He leaves Linnie, promising to return shortly. Soon after Billy and Irma appear and tell the unsuspecting girl what really has taken place. Linnie is horror-stricken, and her two rescuers lift the fainting girl out of the window and speed with her back to the city. Billy makes known the ruse he employed to get Sullivan away.

He did the telephoning and represented himself as the District Attorney.

District Attorney Bryce says to Sullivan when the latter enters the office. "I didn't send for you, but you were wise to come before I did." Hours later, Sullivan goes back to the roadhouse, but finds that Linnie has gone. District Attorney Bryce, speeding on his way to the gorgeous Midwinter Nights' frolic, thinks of the star of the show as he reads a paragraph in a society paper commenting on his attentions to her and making clear that her rise has been due to cleverness and charm only. Linnie Carter is the girl. Sullivan has lost his power and is doomed by the gunmen he betrayed.

Bryce invites Linnie to supper in his rooms at which his sister-in-law will be the chaperon. Billy and Irma, both taking part in the show, enter Linnie's dressing room to admire her. Billy sees with regret that Bryce's card is attached to the flowers in the room. At the finish of her part in the show Linnie gets another note. It is from Sullivan, threatening her and asserting she belongs to him. She shows the note to Billy, who takes her to the waiting automobile. Sullivan attacks Billy and they are quickly surrounded by a crowd. There is a pistol shot and when the on-lookers scatter Sullivan lies mortally wounded. Nobody has seen two of the gangsters in the throng. Billy and Sullivan are rushed to the hospital and the former arrested for the shooting. Linnie is the center of a group of well-bred people at Bryce's. Bryce asks her if Sullivan, the politician is paying attention to any of the Frolic girls. Linnie replies that she doesn't know—she has never heard of him. Bryce is called to the telephone. "Harry Sullivan is dying. I must see him" they say he wants you," he tells her.

Linnie forsees the end of her dreams. Beside Sullivan's bed a detective bends, questioning him about the shooting. Bryce joins the detective while Linnie questions Billy. Sullivan looks at Linnie with a sneer. "Know her?" he says to Bryce. "Why she was my —" Linnie clings to Bryce. "His wife," she says. Sullivan turns to Bryce. "You know what I mean," he leers, then falls back dead. Linnie cries, "It's a lie! It's a lie!"

But Bryce does not apparently hear her. He turns his back toward her and leaves the room. Linnie sways and is caught by Billy. A policeman grasps Billy's arm. Then Linnie knows that Billy is in the meshes of the law. "I'll prove you didn't do it, Bill dear! You're the only real man I've ever met!" she sobs. But Billy is not worrying about himself. Instead he consoles Linnie.

SLIPPING IT OVER ON FATHER (April 23).—The cast: Jack (Arthur Moon); Rena, his sweetheart (Rena Rogers); The Janitor (Paddy McGuire); The Professor (Jack Gaines); The Wife (Louise Owen). Directed by Jack Dillon. Scenario by Robert A. Dillon.

Jack, in love with Rena, finds that her father has sent her to college for the purpose of keeping her out of his reach. He then tries while dressed as a woman to enter the seminary, but without success, as a frivolous professor and a designing janitor who want the attentions of all the girls cause them to be keenly alert, and thwart any attempts of men, disguised as women, to gain access to what they consider are sacred portals.

Jack, finding he has been discovered, returns that night to the Seminary and gains admittance, and so does a burglar, who, by his attempts to rob the girls, gets into a mix-up. The janitor and professor likewise encounter a series of mishaps, which result in the professor's wife finding them in bed in one of the girl's rooms. Things happen fast and furious after this. The girls settle the burglar and administer a severe beating to him, and Jack finds the turmoil and confusion an aid to his plans, and elopes with Rena.

Father comes upon them just as they have been pronounced man and wife, and after a realization of his own youthful pranks, he consents, and forgives the loving couple.

THE ISLAND OF NEVER WAS (April 25.) The cast: The Sailor Man (Rube Miller); The King of the Island (Arthur Tavares); His Favorite (Alice Neice); The King's Neighbor (George Gebhart); His Favorite (Madge Kirby). Directed by Rube Miller.

Rube, a shipwrecked sailor, is cast upon an island, which is inhabited by a tribe of fire worshippers. The girls of the island take a fancy to him, which displeases the men, and they try to put him out of the way, but only succeed in getting hurt themselves. Finally they do catch him napping, and he is put in a cage to be offered as a sacrifice to the volcano on the Island.

The girls release him. He finds out that they are afraid of fire, and as the only thing that has been saved from the ship is a keg of powder and a couple of signal rockets, he has an idea. After he has exploded the powder and set off the rockets, they of the Island think that he is the master of the volcano. All rush towards him to worship him. He thinks they are going to assault him and runs into the water. He wakes to find out that he has been asleep on a barge and has fallen into the water.

BUNGLING BILL, DOCTOR (April 30.).—The cast: Bungling Bill (Paddy McQuire); Jack (Arthur Moon); His Sweetheart (Rena Rogers); The Jealous Superintendent (Jack Gaines). Directed by Jack Dillon. Scenario by Robert A. Dillon.

Bungling Bill burglarizes a house, and in a struggle with Mr. Grouch, the occupant, he is wounded in the hand. Fearful of obtaining medical aid, lest he be traced, Bill fortunately reads in the paper an ad for a hospital orderly, and applying at the hospital he is hired. In the hospital is a young nurse named Rena, whom the superintendent looks upon with much favor, and when he finds her conversing with her sweetheart, Jack, he angrily informs her that she is interned for three months, and must have no communication with outsiders until the expiration of that time.

Jack has this news conveyed to him in a letter. Lovesick and desperate, he falls before a passing automobile, is injured, and in this way accomplishes his purpose of obtaining admission to the hospital. There he meets Bungling Bill, who is nursing Mr. Grouch, who was accidentally shot in the foot by a policeman during the search for Bill in Grouch's home. Grouch tries to expose Bill without success, as the latter keeps him unconscious most of the time by striking him on the head with his blackjack.

Jack in the hospital searches for Rena, and unintentionally enters the room of a sick woman, whose husband, a very jealous man, calls, and finding him there, starts to shoot up the hospital. Bill's identity is learned, and he is about to be captured when he cleverly makes the husband believe that the Superintendent is flirting with his wife, and while the latter is being chased by the husband, Bill makes his getaway.

During the excitement, Jack and Rena, climbing down a fire escape, enter the room of a sick clergyman, and explaining the circumstances to him, win his sympathy and he marries them.

THANHOUSER.

THE GIRL FROM CHICAGO (Two Parts—April 18).—The cast: Girl (Gladys Hulette); boy (George Marlo); Mr. Gray (J. H. Gilmour); butler (Hector Dion); crook (Yale Benner).

The Chief of Police was beginning to worry about his job. There had been a number of mysterious robberies, and a failure to recover the loot caused anger among the victims. Finally a number of them, headed by Grayson, the banker, called upon the Chief and offered a large reward on their own account for the capture of the criminal "Man Higher Up," for it was generally agreed that the gang had a resourceful leader.

That same evening a number of patrons of a quiet restaurant were laughing over the newspaper article telling of the reward. These patrons were members of the gang of criminals, as was the proprietor of the place. A young gril, a stranger to all the patrons, entered and took a seat at a vacant table. As she did so, one of the diners noticed that she patted her hat with her left hand. It was the hailing sign of the gang, but, the man reasoned, it might have been given by accident. Yet he tried her out, and found, to his satisfaction, that she "was one of them." She was from Chicago, she said, and the signals had been give by a celebrated crook there.

Within a short time the "Girl from Chicago" was accepted as a member in good standing. She added to her reputation by a daring escape from a pawn shop when placed under arrest on suspicion. Then "The Man" came into her life. "The Man" was a wealthy young philanthropist, with a fad for reforming criminals. He helped "The Girl" to escape, and asked her to reform. She promised to do so.

A Baroness with a magnificent necklace was to be a guest at a reception in the home of Mrs. Scott, and "The Girl from Chicago" was placed there as the "Buttons," whose duty it was to stand at the door and admit callers. Another member of the gang, disguised as a servant, secured the necklace of the Baroness and passed it to her. Before she could escape, however, she and her accomplice were taken in charge by a plainclothes man. He discovered that The Girl was in disguise, and asked Mrs. Scott and one of the maids to search her. While they were doing so, she escaped, but finding the house surrounded by policemen, she hid in a limousine. It happened that this was the car of the philanthropist who had befriended her before, and she got away in safety. At first the young millionaire declared he would turn her over to the police, but relented, and let her go. He also gave her his card, asking her to call for him if she got into fresh trouble and he would try to aid her.

This second adventure increased the standing of The Girl from Chicago, and she was finally taken before the head of the band and told that she would be accepted henceforth as one of the Inner Circle. The following day, however, she was in jail, and there the rich young man saw her. While they were talking, a message was brought and she was taken before the Chief of Police, The Man going with her. In the office of the Chief were gathered the persons who had subscribed to the reward, and as The Girl from Chicago entered, the Chief announced that the head of the gang was in the room. There was surprise for a moment and it grew as The Girl stopped in front of Banker Grayson, the head of the committee. He was a crook, and "The Girl," a clever young detective. While the banker was being led to a cell, "The Man" asked "The Girl" to be his wife, and she answered in the affirmative.

A MAN'S SIN (Three Parts—April 20).—The cast: Elderly spinster (Nellie Parker Spaulding); her niece (Grace De Carlton); niece's daughter (Grace De Carlton); young doctor (Edwin Stanley); business man (Daniel Leighton); his wife (Ethyle Cooke); their daughter (Isolde Illian).

In a quaint, little, old-fashioned house an old maid lived with her twenty-year-old orphan niece. The little fortune of the aunt dwindles away through unfortunate investments, and the niece insisted upon adding to the family income by securing employment. She secured a position in a wealthy family as governess to two young children.

The nephew of the girl's employer was an unscrupulous youth, who fascinated the little governess and won her confidence. She learned too late that he had no intention of marrying her. The man was soon married to a wealthy society girl, and on the day of the wedding the little governess died and her baby girl was born. The man knew nothing of the child, but the old aunt cherished it.

The orphan grew to womanhood in ignorance of her parentage, and became a nurse in a large hospital. The lives of the nurse and her father ran far apart until the day came when the father was brought into the hospital, unconscious and badly injured. His automobile had plunged over a cliff, killing his wife and badly injuring him. During the time he spent in the hospital he grew greatly attached to his nurse. He had another daughter.

Two men had come into the young nurse's life. One was a young doctor, an interne at the hospital where she was employed, who loved her devotedly and wished to marry her; the other was a wealthy young man, the son af an elderly lady whom she had nursed at her home. The rich youth did not realize the sterling qualities of the nurse, and tried to take advantage of her, but quickly learned his mistake. When the widower returned to his home, he was still far from well, and his young nurse accompanied him to care for him during his convalescence, so the father and his two daughters were both under the same roof, and the old maiden aunt at last had her opportunity for revenge. The recemblance between the two girls was remarkable, and the old aunt determined to use this coincidence to blight the life of the young heiress and to wreak vengeance upon her father.

The aunt induced her unsuspecting niece to invite the heiress to her home, and cleverly arranged meetings between the rich youth and the heiress. The old woman told her little victim that it would be so romantic to pretend that she was a penniless little nurse instead of a young lady of wealth, while she warned the young man that any reference to the past would displease her niece. The deception was maintained, the man believing that his affair with the young nurse had been renewed, while the heiress fondly believed that her new suitor, believing her poor, could care only for her. An elopement was arranged, and the wealthy youth and the heiress left the old woman's home to take the train for Washington. While the couple were on their way to the railway station the aunt went to the sick man's home and confronted him.

The invalid was startled when he recognized the aunt of the girl whom he had wronged, but he was stunned when she told him how she had arranged to have his daughter, the child of the woman he had married, share the same fate. In vain he pleaded, but the little nurse heard, and in her heart was only compassion for the girl who was to suffer for her father's sin. She sumoned her sweetheart, the young doctor, and together the two sped to the railway station, hoping to be in time to overtake the elopers. They arrived in time, but destiny had already punished the man whom the heiress had believed to be all that was good and noble, and the two rescuers led the weeping girl out of the station, while the body of the man was borne away. "Go home to your father," the little nurse said to the heiress, "and tell him for me that I believe in forgiving a penitent." The rich girl believed that the nurse meant that the father should forgive her elopement, but the young doctor understood the true meaning of the word—forgiveness for the father's sin. The nurse could freely give it, for the young physician, in spite of her life story, loved her devotedly and was soon to marry her.

DeWolf Hopper in "Sunshine Dad" with Fay Tincher

The TRIANGLE-Fine Arts Picture for the week of April 23rd will be De Wolf Hopper in "Sunshine Dad." This, the initial appearance of Hopper in motion pictures, has been declared by all who have seen it in advance of exhibition to be one of the best plays that has yet been produced.

All of the inimitable characteristics which have made this star famous on the legitimate stage are magnified and enhanced on the screen. Your patrons will find themselves constantly laughing with joy and glee at the new style comedy of this great picture. Never for a moment are you allowed to forget the funny situation of the gay old man who comes to his son day after day to overdraw his allowance, or the serious efforts of the younger man to curb the extravagance of the father.

When your patrons have seen the wonderful mystery of "Sunshine Dad," when they have grasped the cleverness, and tingling quality of this play, they will appreciate that it stands out as one of the big motion pictures of the year.

A Lion in a Bathtub

It required weeks of patient, nerve-racking effort to get the lion to do the things he had to do in this latest TRIANGLE PICTURE. He wasn't a lovable lion at all, and he hated bathtubs, so De Wolf Hopper and Fay Tincher were not ACTING in the scenes with the lion. It was mighty serious business for them.

Just imagine the effect on your audience of a scene in which Fay Tincher has been tied to a post to be sacrificed and be torn to pieces by a hungry lion. And it's a real lion too. You can hear a pin drop as the door of the cage slowly but surely raises up while the angry beast paces back and forth, anxious to get at its prey.

Hopper appears and rescues the girl just a second before the savage animal dashes from his cage. And then it's a race for life, in one door and out of another, the lion always a close second until he catches Fay Tincher in the bathtub. Imagine her horror. You'd feel the same under the circumstances.

Motion picture patrons throughout the country are sure to appreciate this latest TRIANGLE PLAY.

Wm. H. Thompson

"Civilization's Child"

Then the TRIANGLE-Ince Picture for the same week, "Civilization's Child"—with Anna Lehr and William H. Thompson—is a play that is bound to penetrate right to the hearts of the most disinterested theatregoer. It's a picture that vividly portrays conditions as they are in New York today, and is sure to awaken more than a spark of sympathy for the difficulties that beset the paths of the innocent and unwary in a great city like New York.

A MAN OF HONOR (Two Parts, April 25).—The cast: J. Leonard Carter (George Marlow); retired banker (J. H. Gilmour); his twin daughters (Marion and Madeline Fairbanks); fighter (Bert Keyes).

The retired banker was extremely fond of his twin daughters and exceptionally pleased with the reputation they made at college. One of them was justly known as the "athletic girl" and for her use the father fitted up a gymnasium. The other twin was a "quiet girl," but to please her sister she would box and fence with her. One day the two girls were in the gymnasium when the suitor of the "quiet girl" called, and the "athletic girl" promptly found herself without an opponent, so she went out riding on horseback with her father. While the two were out on the road, the girl induced her father to halt his horse while the daughter showed him how well she could gallop. Much to her surprise, the horse ran away, but an active young man grabbed the horse and stopped it before an accident occurred.

The banker came up and was profuse in his thanks. Both he and his daughter were much taken by the stranger whom they took for a gentleman athlete because he said "I was a football man at college." He then explained his presence on the road by saying he always tried to keep himself in condition. Under the circumstances he was invited to call, and did so, and the friendship between him and the athletic girl quickened ripened into love.

By accident the father learned the identity of the caller. He was nearly the champion heavy weight pugilist and was training for a bout. He frankly admitted his identity when questioned and explained that he had been a college man and well to do, but misfortune came upon him just at the time he graduated. He had a mother and sister dependent upon him, was forced to support them, and found the easiest way to make real money was in the prize ring. The athletic girl was shocked at the news and at first believed she never wanted to see the young man again.

About this time the young man's personalities were added to by the latter's desire to help and submitted a proposition. He had no objections to the young man as a son-in-law, he said, if he gave up the prize ring, but he could not permit his daughter to wed a prizefighter. "I have every confidence in you," the banker said. "You go on with the fight and I am positive you will win $50,000." He agreed more to keep her waiting.

On the day of the battle he received a telephone call of the amount of money he could make and intimating that if he bet the limit he might count upon it. He did so, and of the money and in all probability saved the daughter. When the latter became the young man's wife, of all the comforts and luxury she would, however, be visited to experience. Let briefly it appeared, and is pleasing to record, at the ring side was the parent of the athletic girl disguised in false whiskers and long wig, too. They saw the fight and after it was over went to the champion. Mad to be married the banker greeted him cordially.

"But after I knew you, to make sure, to test you out. Had you accepted at once I would have lost my respect for you. I tried you out, but I wanted to be sure my daughter married a man of honor, and you have conclusively proved that you are so. I demanded a son-in-law of mine should be."

FALSTAFF.

THE SAILOR'S SMILING SPIRIT (April 17).—The cast: Smiling Sailor (Walter Hiers); His Wife (Gladys Leslie); Wealthy Green Grocer (Riley Chamberlin); Wicked Anarchist (Thomas A. Curran).

The green grocer hated the smiling sailor because he wished that the smiling sailor's wife was a widow so he could marry her. The wicked anarchist had an oversupply of bombs and he suggested that if a few tons of them were hidden about on the smiling sailor's ship it would be an absolute certainty that the sailor's wife would soon be mourning his loss. So the green grocer speculated in bombs and the anarchists friends placed many score of them on the vessel without any interruption.

A few hours after the ship sailed the anarchist was arrested and, boasting of his numerous crimes, he told of what happened to the ship. The sailor's wife naturally believed she was a widow, and when the wealthy green grocer came courting her she listened to his words of love. Now the green grocer would have been very happy had it not been for the fact that everywhere he went it seemed to him that he saw the spirit of the smiling sailor. The green grocer found, however, that by utilizing other strong spirits he could banish the smiling sailor's spirit, so he doggedly continued his flirtation with the widow, and at last their marriage day was arranged.

On that morning green grocer was waiting in the widow's parlor while the widow was arraying herself in her bridal gown preparatory to a trip to the minister's. It came as rather a shock to the green grocer when he again saw the spirit walk up to him and ask him what he wanted there. For a time the green grocer believed he was conversing with a spirit and he defied him to do his worst, but a few moments after the secret was revealed, for the "widow" came in, not in her bridal gown, but in her ordinary house dress. She had hastily changed when she saw the "spirit," for she knew it was her husband, who had returned safely after all.

He told her that the voyage had been extremely prosperous, owing to the fact that large quantities of ammunition had been discovered on board and that these had been sold to soldiers in foreign lands. He explained how his voyage had been delayed, and then asked the question the wife was ready to answer: "Who was this man and what was he doing in the house."

The wife smiled up sweetly at him and replied: "My dear, he has called to try to sell some groceries, but I'm afraid he has been drinking and I wish you would put him out." The sailor gallantly did as requested.

SIMPLE SIMON'S SCHOOLING (April 22).—The cast: Simple Simon (Claude Cooper); His Rival (Billy Noel); Rival's Father (Frank E. McNish); Teacher of Writing (Gladys Leslie).

The grocer was known in the village as "Simple Simon," and many were the tricks played upon him. The "humorists" had lots of fun, but it never struck them that they were making Simon a wealthy man. A theatrical manager would have figured out that as the grocery supplied the only vaudeville entertainment in its community, its proprietor naturally did the business. Simon realized this, for he was more or less of a philosopher.

One individual who "picked on" the grocer was a young college graduate who had won honors as a baseball pitcher. His jests were rather above the average in strenuousness, and the grocer soon grew to dislike him, especially when he found cats in the sugar bin and dogs chewing at ground coffee. But the college boy kept on with his "jokes" and was as happy as a child.

There was excitement in the village one day when a beautiful maiden appeared. She explained that she intended to start a class in penmanship and "hoped that the gentlemen would join." She was so pretty that they did with great enthusiasm. And just as naturally they all fell in love with her.

The college boy seemed to have the inside track but Simon the simple grocer, was the dark horse who won the prize. "Teacher" gave a town party, her pupils being the guests, and explained to them that every man there had proposed to her. She had decided, however, that the man she married must be her partner as well as her husband. Therefore, she said they could submit specimens of their handwriting and the best hand would win.

This looked like an easy victory for the college boy because he had the best hand writing in town, but he had reckoned without Simon, for when the grocer submitted his offering, teacher threw herself in his arms.

"I was never so thrilled by handwriting in my life," she explained to her disappointed suitors.

For what Simon wrote was a check "payable to my wife on her wedding day" for $10,000.

Moral: Kind words are more than coronets, but—worked only when necessary to obtain money to pay his bills. His children were cheerful, energetic girls, who kept the house in "apple-pie" order, and were veritable sunbeams to their father, who took their devotion as a matter of course, never dreaming that the time would come when he would lose them. Suddenly the five girls were married, and they stopped the protests of their father by telling him that he would always be welcomed at their new homes. In this sentiment, however, their husbands did not concur, and father discovered later that while "wifey" generally rules the home that sometimes "hubby" can make it mighty uncomfortable for an intruder.

Certified checks beat hot-air effusions, no matter how neatly they are written.

Father first called upon the barber, who had married his eldest daughter. During courtship days the barber had been very courteous to the old man, but the air of proprietorship with which his father-in-law sauntered into his shop irritated him and he roughly told the old man that if he wished to stay there he would have to assist in shaving the customers. Father did his best, but his best was very bad, and after the shop was almost demolished by the angry customer he sadly continues on his way, firmly convinced that his son-in-law, the garage owner, would treat him differently.

And the garage owner did! He induced father to creep under an automobile to look at the differential and then started the car, coming very close to running over the old man's neck. Garage life, after this demonstration, held no attractions for father, and he found another son-in-law, the painter, to be equally unfeeling, all because the old man thoughtlessly upset the painter's swing and dropped them both to the ground many feet below.

"The young milliner who married my daughter Ruth is very gentle," he said to himself. "He isn't a bit like the others." The old man was right—the milliner was gentle, but one of his lady customers was not, and father angered her so much that she chased him for five blocks and he nearly had heart failure before he finally escaped.

The man who married the youngest daughter was a building contractor, who promptly vetoed his father-in-law's suggestion that he become his business associate. The contractor supplied his relative by marriage with a nice hod full of bricks and sent him to an upper floor of a building which he was erecting. Everything would have gone along all right if father hadn't dropped the bricks upon an Italian laborer, who pursued him, knife in hand, until father toppled from the scafford into a passing ash cart.

The ashes were dumped into a vacant lot, and there father was found by a widow who owned a delicatessen store, and who, some time before, had taken advantage of Leap Year to propose to the old man. She renewed her suit. So father married the widow and resolved to forever forget his faithless sons-in-law.

WILLING WENDY TO WILLIE (April 29).—The cast: Wendy (Frances Keyes); Willie (Jay C. Yorke); Town Miser (H. G. Fergus).

The rich man of the village was thoroughly convinced that all his neighbors were after his money. He hated anybody who got ahead of him, although these occasions were few and far between, but there were two persons particularly who aroused his ire, and these he vowed he would be revenged upon.

One was Wendy, an ambitious widow, who hoped to marry the rich man and show him how to spend his fortune. She so arranged things that two of her neighbors were ready to swear in court that the rich man had embraced Wendy. They were perfectly truthful in their testimony, for they did not know that Wendy had deliberately planned the embrace, intending to use her friends as witnesses in a breach of promise suit, and the rich man was very indignant when the papers in the case were served upon him.

His other enemy was Willie, a noisy individual who boasted long and loud because he had tricked the rich man in a horse trade. If he had known that vengeance was sure he would never have chuckled so loudly, but it never struck him that his little financial venture meant a later life time of misery.

GAUMONT.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 27 ("San Francisco, Cal."—Mar. 19).—San Francisco, the largest city west of the Mississippi, is the subject for the Gaumont company's scenic, "See America First," No. 27. The business section, Market street, the downtown hotels, the manufacturing plants, the harbor and shipping industries, and the various settings for San Francisco's great commercial activities constitute a large part of the picture.

The quaint old adobe mission Dolores, Cliff House and Seal Rock, Golden Gate Park, the Presidio, and glimpses of the various colleges located in the city are also pictured, as are the beautiful drives and residential districts.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 29 ("Charleston, S. C."—Apr. 2).—South Carolina's largest city and famous seaport, Charleston, with its picturesque and historic spots of nation-wide interest, is the subject for the Mutual's popular split reel scenic and cartoon comic, "See America First," No. 29. Fort Sumter, where the first shot of the Civil War was fired, located in the Charleston harbor; the old church of St. Michael's; the wonderful harbor which forms the naval station for the south Atlantic; the cotton and flour mills; the carriage and machinery manufacturing establishments; the beautiful residences and parks and driveways make up an interesting half reel.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 30 ("The Wonder Spots of Del Monte"—Apr. 5).—Beautiful Del Monte, Cal., famed far and wide for its wonderful hotels, beautiful driveways, glorious foliage and pretty women, is shown in all its grandeur in this popular Mutual scenic, "See America First," No. 30. Entering the city from the great boulevard, the Mecca of countless thousands of auto tourists each day, the cameraman swirls you through the city in his auto, pointing out the great hotels, the handsome residences of the wealthy surrounded by great tracts covered with beautiful tropical foliage, the driveways lined by stately palms and dozens of other points of interest. Del Monte, "the city beautiful," whose fame is spread over two countinents, affords one of the most interesting travel pictures yet shown in these "See America First" releases.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 31 ("Historic St. Augustine, Fla."—Apr. 12).—St. Augustine is the seat of many traditions of the early Spanish days in Florida, and most of the historical spots have been photographed by the Mutual cameraman and incorporated in the Gaumont company's split reel scenic, "See America First," No. 31. The charming, quaint, narrow streets, the old Spanish fort, the oldest house in the United States, the beach, the curious Spanish types of architecture make charming photography and interesting subject matter for every child and adult who has studied history or geography. The golden sunshine of Florida makes possible wonderful scenes of great pictorial splendor.

THE CONQUERING HERO (April 21).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Hank (George George); Ginger (Louise Horner); Dressmaker (Janet Sully); First Cop (Harry Jackson); Second Cop (Gordon McGregor); Third Cop-Sergeant (Arthur Mund). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Jerry resents the intrusion of a policeman upon his peaceful dreams, while curled up on a park bench, by putting the stout guardian into sweet repose with the use of a large club. While making a hasty exit out of the sight of the recovering "cop" Jerry is attracted by a loving couple on another park bench, and he at once finds it impossible to make his eyes behave.

They attract the attention of Ginger, although she is being courted by Hank, and while looking over the shoulder of the elongated one she winks repeatedly at Jerry, giving him lots of courage. Hank gets an inkling of the flirtation and when he sees Jerry standing over his lady love he lets fly with both hands, but Jerry is too quick and he ducks, the blow falls on Ginger. Hank is overcome at the turn of events and attempts to explain, and as he bends over, Jerry lays him low with an iron pipe and then escapes. Hank, recovering, wants to make good, so he goes off to buy some soda pop. While he is gone Jerry hurries to the side of Ginger and while the two are having a delightful love scene Hank returns. He is about to wipe up the park with Jerry when the little fellow grabs a bottle of pop and again sends Hank sprawling to the ground and a moment later Jerry and Ginger run off together.

Jerry is progressing very nicely with his love making when two other policemen hear Hank's tale and the trio start a hunt for the wooer. They soon discover Jerry and Ginger wrapped in each others arms, but while they debate as to how an approach should be made, Jerry gets wise and is off.

Hank is determined, and his lanky legs soon overtake Jerry, but the quickness of the latter carries him into a big elevator building, and before Hank can lay hands on him he takes command of an elevator and shoots it upward. Hank goes in another elevator and gives chase and as a last resort Jerry makes for the roof. As he hides behind a chimney Hank spies him and the two struggle all over the roof, finally reaching the edge, Hank's superior strength gets the better of Jerry and the little fellow is sent flying through space to crash on the ground fourteen stories below.

A crowd gathers, expecting to see a grease spot, but they are all knocked silly when Jerry jumps to his feet, brushes a little dirt from his clothing and starts off on a run. Hank, thinking that he has killed Jerry goes in an opposite direction, only to come face to face with his tormentor a few minutes later. Another chase follows and Jerry hides in a barrel, believing that Hank has not detected him. Hank creeps up, however, slaps a cover over the barrel and with the assistance of a carpenter nails it down. Jerry is then sent off on a perilous journey, coming to an end when the barrel crashes into a building. But again he is unhurt, and, seeing Hank in the distance, he runs to a dressmaking establishment and there he gets inside of a suit model and a handy woman's hat helps to disguise him.

Hank strolls by and is attracted by the model. He flirts and then puts his arm about it. As he looks sheepishly towards the ground he sees Jerry's feet sticking out from under the dress and he becomes furious and starts to choke his victim. Two policemen see the act and believing that Hank is killing a woman they hurry on and beat him furiously over the head with their clubs. While the uproar is going on Jerry ducks out from under the female garb, throws the model into the arms of a copper, who thinks it is a fainting woman. All hands get into a terrible mixup as Jerry hurries away to the park. At last alone, he gets behind a bush and laughs long.

ART AND ARTHUR (April 9).—The cast: Arthur (Orral Humphrey); His Mother (Lucille Ward). Directed by Phil Walsh.

Arthur indulged by fond parents is set up in a studio where he strives to produce a Masterpiece. His father and mother from the country visit him at the studio. His mother is very enthusiastic over Arthur's artistic success, while his father is thoroughly disgusted with the subjects, which to his mind, disapprove Arthur's ability.

The father confides with a neighbor artist to inspire in Arthur's mind a desire to draw from life. They force a model upon him. Arthur is very bashful and horribly shocked, as the model insists that she poses only nude. When she has reduced her apparel to a flimsy lingerie, Arthur's mother arrives at the studio, discovers her son in the presence of an undressed woman, promptly faints and is restored to consciousness with smelling salts and at once closes the studio and re-establishes her son in his position in the country bank.

NUMBER PLEASE? (April 19).—The cast: Lizzie Snow (Carol Halloway); Jimmie (John Sheehan); J. H. Kremly (John Steppling); Mrs. Kremly (Mary Talbot); Fieble, Kremly's Clerk (Dick Rosson).

Joe, a lineman, loves Lizzie, a telephone operator. Kremly, a broker, has made a brilliant speech and an account of it with his picture appears in the paper which Lizzie proceeds to enjoy, while Kremly tries to get her on the phone. Finally she gets to a stopping place and very sweetly tells him the time.

Lizzie discovers Joe flirting with two girls from the top of a pole and is sore at him. Mrs. Kremly gets her husband on the line to tell him she wants to go to lunch with him. Joe is trying to talk to Lizzie, but slips and crosses the wires, so that Kremly makes the date with Lizzie, thinking her his wife. Lizzie proudly departs to meet the illustrious Kremly. He is surprised to learn that he has asked her to luncheon, but decides to see it through. Mrs. Kremly exasperated at the cut-off, goes to the office, and finding where her husband is lunching, goes to meet him. When she arrives Kremly is having a good time with Lizzie and Mrs. Kremly makes a scene and has Lizzie arrested.

Joe comes to the rescue and snatching Lizzie out of the arms of the law, runs away with her on his motorcycle. The Kremlys institute divorce proceedings. While Kremly is with the lawyer, his clerk plans with a confederate to rob the office, and Lizzie hears their talk over the wire and gets a policeman who captures the money and the thieves. Lizzie is in Kremly's office with the policeman when the Kremlys return and takes refuge in a closet. Mrs. Kremly drags her out with injurious intentions, but explanations and reward follow.

As Lizzie is returning to her work, Jim intercepts her, but she scorns his offer of marriage since she has money. He forces her consent by marooning her at the top of a telephone pole, and the picture closes with Cupid sitting on the crossbar.

THE BOOKWORM'S BLESSED BLUNDERS (April 26).—The cast: O. Ignatius (Orral Humphrey); Miss Raspberry (Lucille Ward).

Ignatius is the proprietor of a small second-hand book store, and a confirmed bookworm with his nose invariably stuck in a book. A bell on the table by which he sits is used by customers to arouse him when his services are needed.

En route home, and reading as he goes along, Ignatius absently wanders into the house next door. So engrossed that he does not notice the mistake, he seats himself at the table and starts to eat. The spinster Cully, thinking that he is courting her, sets out a feed in front of him, and Ignatius goes on eating and reading until he chances to look up and sees her. It is a beginning of a romance for both.

But Ignatius is poor and realizes that he must have more money before he can wed. As he is counting his savings, a customer enters and purchases a book. Ignatius absently slips a dollar bill in the book. Another customer, and a third receive the same treatment. Ignatius discovers what he has done, and decides it will be a good way to liven up business. The customers find the bills and hasten back to the store for more books. Again each of them is given a bill. They inform their friends of their discovery and Ignatius' bookstore does a big business, selling out completely, and Ignatius finds himself quite well off, while the customers learn that the flow of bills has ceased. Ignatius calls up the spinster, tells her of his good fortune, and suggests that they marry. She agrees, sends for a minister, and he starts out for her home.

But as usual he is engrossed in a book, he forgets the wedding, and going to his room, keeps on reading. The spinster and the preacher are patiently waiting. Ignatius reaches the end of the book, the last line of which is "And So They Were Married." This recalls something to him. He remembers, dashes over to the spinster's house, and succeeding in smoothing over the spinster's wrath, is married.

MUSTANG.

A FLICKERING LIGHT (Two Parts—April 14).—The cast: Jim (Frank Borzage); Hardy Anderson (Jack Richardson); Madge (Anna Little). Directed by Borzage and Berger. Scenario by Karl Coolidge.

Jim, a cowboy, comes to town with the boys of the Lazy B, and stops at the Last Chance Saloon. One of the girls of the dance-hall is Madge. Hardy, owner of a distant cattle ranch, comes to her and offers her a position as housekeeper, which proposition she spurns.

Jim has a flirtation with Madge, and she interests him. Late that night, Jim, well under the influence of liquor, chances to meet her again. On the impulse of the moment he asks her to marry him. Madge thinks back to Hardy's statement that "No one would ever marry a dance hall girl" and accepts his proposal.

The foreman of the Lazy B is short of help for the spring round-up, and sends one of the boys to ask Jim if he is willing to join them. The cowboy eyes Madge laughingly—and this brings Jim to his senses. He angrily tells the cowboy that Madge is his wife—and that, as such, she must be respected. The cowboy apologizes. Jim consents to join the round-up, and leaving sufficient money for Madge, sets off. The weeks pass, and Hardy arrives in town again. He inquires at the dancehall and learns of Madge's marriage to Jim, and is furious.

The round-up over, the boys start home. Hardy has heard of Jim's absence from town and goes to see Madge. Madge refuses to admit him, and finally breaking the door down, he enters. Jim returns, and sees Hardy with Madge. But when Madge fights Hardy as he tries to embrace her, Jim sees the real nature of the affair—more so when he notices the shattered door and, entering, he forces Hardy to leave. Madge fears that Jim has gained a false impression of the incident, but he quickly reassures her, and in place of the old silver ring that had been used at the marriage, he slips on her finger a new and real one.

REALIZATION (Three Parts—April 22).—The cast: Carl (Alfred Vosburgh); Elsa (Vivian Rich); Brown (Georgo Periolat); Elsa's Mother (Louise Lester). Barbara (Edna Rawley). Max Palmer (Joseph Beaudry).

Carl, the first violin in a theater orchestra, loves his violin as a part of himself. Elsa, a poor young girl, living with her widowed mother, is possessed of a remarkable voice. Fired with an ambition to become an operatic star, she applied for a place with the company playing at Carl's theater, and secures an engagement for a small part. She meets Carl and there is an instant sympathy between them.

Elsa, on the stage, keeps up her courage through the realization that Carl is sympathizing with her and sustaining her with the magic of his violin. They meet frequently at the theater, and Elsa eventually invites him to call. This he does, bringing his violin with him and playing for her. Through the inspiration of Carl's love and sympathy she develops rapidly in her operatic work and soon attracts public attention. Brown, a wealthy man about town, becomes infatuated with her. He presents her with flowers, secures an introduction, and succeeds eventually in inducing her to accept his hospitality at a fashionable cafe. Brown finally makes a proposal to her that shocks her, and she awakens then to the nobility of Carl's love and the poison and sordidness of Brown's infatuation.

Carl receives word that his sister Barbara, whom he has not seen for several years, will arrive for a short visit. He writes a note to Elsa asking her to meet him and Barbara at the Florentine Cafe and have lunch with them. He has the note sent to her dressing room. She is not in when it is left there. Brown calls at her dressing room while she is still out; finds the note, sees in it an opportunity to turn it to his own account, and accordingly puts it in his pocket. Believing that Elsa's refusal to accede to his proposal is due to love and her regard for Carl, Brown plots to disillusion Elsa by telling her that all men have their affinities and that her beloved Carl is no exception to the rule. She indignantly resents this aspersion upon the character of Carl, but Brown tells her to go with him to the Florentine Cafe about one o'clock the next day. More to prove the falsity of Brown's accusation than because of any suspicion of Carl, she goes with Brown and discovers Carl with a beautiful young woman. The shock of this apparent revelation of Carl's perfidy renders her utterly reckless and desperate.

That evening Carl seeks an interview with Elsa to learn of her reason for not joining him and Barbara at lunch; but she silently scorns him. In the midst of her performance that evening her draperies catch fire. Carl springs upon the stage just as Elsa faints. He tears the burning draperies from her with his hands; then falls exhausted.

When Elsa recovers she finds herself in the arms of Brown. She believes it is he who has saved her. Carl is taken to the hospital, accompanied by Barbara who has been present in the theater, and it is feared he may die. He asks for Elsa. Barbara hastens back to the theater for her. She arrives just as Elsa is about to leave with Brown. Barbara begs her to come to Carl. Elsa, recognizing her as the woman she saw with Carl at the cafe, laughs in her face. Barbara then tells her she is Carl's sister and that it was Carl who saved her and is now probably dying as the result of it. Horror-stricken she hurries with Barbara to the hospital. Carl's life is spared, and he wins Elsa.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE.

MASTER SHAKESPEARE, STROLLING PLAYER (Thanhouser—Five Parts—No. 94—April 20).—The cast: Miss Gray (Florence La Badie); Lieut. Stanton (Robert Vaughn); William Shakespeare (Lawrence Swinburne); Lord Bacon (Robert Whittier).

Miss Gray, the daughter of Colonel Gray, according to the story, is very fond of literature. The plays of Shakespeare have afforded special interest to her, but she has come to believe, very sincerely, that they were the work of Bacon instead of the Bard of Avon. The girl's fiance, Lieutenant Stanton, does not agree with her. At last, because she has been used to having her own way in every particular, she determines to make her affianced husband agree with her on this one subject. Their discussion leads to a serious misunderstanding, and their engagement is broken.

Stanton is transferred, at his request, to the Mexican border. After his departure she feels more curious than ever about Shakespeare's life and reads his plays and studies his life with a new eagerness. At length she comes to learn that humanity and understanding means more than a coronet, and feels that her pride of race had previously made her unjust.

At this time a dispatch from the West tells her that Stanton has been wounded in a fight with bandits. It leaves the girl stunned and ill. In her delirium she finds herself standing in front of an old English castle. A stately woman, in the costume of the Elizabethan period, addresses her as "daughter," and orders her to enter the coach. At first puzzled, the girl at length realizes that she is back again in the sixteenth century in England, and that she is the daughter of the Earl of Pembroke.

At a tavern in the country the coach stops to change horses, and the girl and Lady Pembroke alight, wearing the masks with which ladies of the court always travel. A handsomely dressed noble, who had long wooed the young lady in vain, passes by. He determines to steal her away to his castle. Summoning his retainers, the noble enters the tavern, and is at the point of carrying the girl away when a young soldier, a trusted follower of Drake, espouses the girl's cause, and, single-handed, holds the enemies back. To her surprise, the girl recognizes her former fiance, Lieut. Stanton.

The combat is so unequal that it seems as if the young soldier will be overcome. At this juncture a stranger enters the room, draws his sword in behalf of the youth, and joins in the fray. The assailants of the young woman are put to route, and the gallant rescuer announces himself with a bow and flourish, as Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player.

At the performance of Shakespeare's play before the Court, Lord Bacon sends one of the poet's scholars, whom he had bribed, to declare that Shakespeare had stolen the play from him.

Bacon brings about a duel, and the young officer, less skilled than he, is killed. As the girl throws herself on the lifeless form of the soldier, she awakes, and finds herself back in the twentieth century, safe in her father's house.

And from the other room appears the sturdy form of the young Lieutenant, who had only been injured in Mexico.

THE CONSCIENCE OF JOHN DAVID (Centaur—Five Parts—April 24).—The cast: John David (Crane Wilbur); The Worldly Woman (Alice Rinaldo); The Libertine (Frederick Montague); The Wanderer (John Oaker); The Girl (Mae Gaston); The Gambler (Louis Durham); The Crippled Child (Francis Raymond).

John David, a spender, promises marriage to the Worldly Woman. He suggests by letter that their engagement be announced at a big dinner he will give. The Worldly Woman is also admired by the Libertine, who calls at the Worldly Woman's apartment and is admitted by a Japanese butler whom he abuses, arousing a hatred which the Jap keeps well under control. The Libertine attempts to make love the Worldly Woman but she holds him off by flaunting David's offer of marriage in his face. When she leaves the room the libertine turns his attentions to a Japanese maid, the wife of Yamato, the Jap butler. His attempt to caress her frightens her and she screams, bringing Yamato into the room and between the two struggling people. The Libertine slaps Yamato across the face for what he terms insolence. The little Jap bows his way out but with suppressed anger in his heart.

The night of the big dinner arrives and John announces his coming marriage. One of the guests suddenly discovers that there are but thirteen people at the table, and John leaves the party to go out and find the fourteenth. He chances to meet the Wanderer, an individual he once knew but who he does not recognize. John meets a pretty girl and grabs her by the arm and begs her to join his party. The Wanderer makes John let her go. John is furious but the soothing words of reproach of the Wanderer change his mind, whereupon he smilingly admits his wrong, gives him his hand and takes him to the banquet room.

The newcomer is greeted with hilarity and is called upon to speak. After a toast he turns to John and quietly but forcibly berates him for his waste. He describes how this waste would give life to starving fatalities and as he finishes a butler enters with a telegram which reads: "Cut expenses immediately. Your entire fortune swept away. Letter explains." The guests leave, and John is left alone with the Wanderer, and he asks the Wanderer's identity. The Wanderer answers: "I am your conscience." Thereafter the Wanderer is called Conscience.

John and Conscience go to the home of the Worldly Woman, Conscience pretending at the door. John discovers her in the arms of the Libertine. She says that the Libertine is now her accepted lover. John attacks the Libertine and during the row Conscience attempts to throttle him. From under the draperies of the couch a brown hand steals. It contains a long needle which it plunges into the back of the Libertine. The head of the Libertine falls back dead. John thanks he has conquered his adversary. He and Conscience leave for the West. Days pass. On the train he reads in a newspaper that evidence points to the Wanderer and that he has been indicted for murder. The presence of Conscience betrays him and to escape he leaps from the train and boards a freight train going in the same direction. Conscience follows however. They take refuge in an open car but where they are located by two tramps and forced to exchange their clothing and to give up their valuables.

The town of Laurel Run is in the throes of excitement, a drove of horses belonging to the sheriff having been stolen. The unknown criminals is the Gambler and he has sold the horses to two Mexicans, one of the horses a pony, and the Sheriff's favorite mount, escapes the Mexicans and wanders into an open plain. John and Conscience discovered by the train crew, are thrown from the car and wandering along come upon the pony. John mounts it and with Conscience at his side goes to Laurel Run. The sight of two vagabonds entering the town, one of them riding the Sheriff's pony, is positive proof to the villagers that the strangers are the thieves; that is all except the Sheriff's daughter the postmistress of the village. Instinctively she feels they are innocent. The Gambler proclaims that they be punished, and incites a mob to wreak its vengeance. The Girl steps in however, and at the point of a gun stays them off, pending the return of her father who with a posse, has gone after the thieves. Meanwhile the Sheriff returns with the stolen horses and the crowd's temper changing, it disperses.

In time John becomes a popular citizen. He has fallen in love with the Girl, much to the chagrin of the Gambler. Through the Girl's efforts John gets a place as a rural free delivery letter carrier. Meanwhile the Gambler's antipathy for John has increased, and he attempts to find a way to discount him in the eyes of the Girl. One day he spies John intently reading a newspaper which carries a story to the effect that the Woman had been acquitted in the Libertine murder case and that a search has been instituted for John David, whom she has accused. John hurries away leaving the paper lying on the ground. The Gambler picks it up and divines through the story the cause of John's agitation, wires the New York police department of John's whereabouts. John proposes marriage to the Girl and is accepted.

Some days elapse when a long legal looking envelope addressed to the Sheriff arrives. John discovers it as he sorts the mail. Fearing the worst, he succumbs to temptation, opens it and finds an announcement of a reward for his capture. Resolving to keep his secret he places the envelope in his pocket. Later a stranger arrived in the city. His mission was unknown, though he posed as an automobile salesman. The Gambler, still alert for evidence, shadows John and one evening finds him alone in his cabin gazing meditatively at the reward sheet and the photo of the Girl laying on the table before him. The Gambler enters and at the point of a gun obtains the sheet. A fight follows, lamp is knocked down, the house is set into flames, and John, after overcoming the Gambler, escapes just before the house collapses.

The next day John and the Girl are to be married. The Stranger enters the post-office, obtains his mail from John and leaves. At noon the wedding ceremony is held. In the midst of it John suddenly draws back in horror and shouts that the marriage cannot continue—that he is a murderer. At this point the Stranger enters, introduces himself to the Sheriff as a detective, and taking from his pocket a letter from his chief reads an announcement of John's innocence; that the Libertine was killed by Yamato, who confesses on his death bed.

So the Conscience of John David was satisfied and glorified. John turns to go out but the Girl holds out her arms to him and the Sheriff clasps his hand and gently moves him into the arms of the Girl.

THE STAIN IN THE BLOOD (Signal—Five parts, April 27.) The cast: Mary Thompson (Edythe Sterling); Joe Thompson (Norbert A. Myles); Bill Jenkins, their foster father (Murdock J. MacQuarrie). The Cabaret Singer (Dorothy Nash). The Inventor (Millard K. Wilson). Directed by Murdock MacQuarrie. Scenario by Robert A. Dillon.

En route to the West, Mary and Joe Thompson are left orphans through the death of their parents during an Indian raid on their wagon train. Joe manages to escape with Mary in his arms and they eventually reach a little western mining town, where Bill Jenkins, a prospector, finds them and takes them into his home as his children. About the time Joe reaches manhood Jenkins is made sheriff. Joe has developed vicious traits, and has been making a practice of highway robbery.

Unknown to Jenkins or to his sister, he one day holds up a stage. After it has passed him, the messenger dismounts from the box and starts back to see if he can capture the bandit. A gun fight follows in which Joe is seriously wounded. Joe makes his escape and arrives home weak from loss of blood. Mary demands an explanation of his condition and he confesses his crime. He tells her that he will surely be captured and urges her to go East with him. She agrees on the condition that he leave his plunder there to be found later and restored to its owners. He reluctantly agrees. They go to the railroad where an engine tender sees them aboard a train.

In the meantime, the stage has arrived and the news of the robbery is spread. The citizens organize a posse to try and capture the bandit. Jenkins, the sheriff, goes to the house, where he finds the blood stains and the money which Joe left in his flight. Just then the posse enters. When they see the unmistakable evidence of robbery, they accuse Jenkins of being the guilty one, and are about to lynch him when the engine tender comes upon the scene and tells of having seen Joe and Mary leave town.

Jenkins boards a light engine and starts in pursuit of Joe and Mary. At a town not far down the track, Joe, too weak to travel farther, leaves the train with Mary, and they go to a hotel. Jenkins hears of this and trails them there with the posse. To avoid suspicion, Mary registers for Joe, showing them as man and wife. They are caught, and Joe surrenders.

Mary goes on east where she secures employment in the laboratories of a young inventor. She later marries him and still later he succeeds in selling an invention which leaves them independently wealthy. Joe, in the meantime, has escaped from prison and no one has been able to locate him.

Mary's husband meets and becomes infatuated with a cabaret singer, the same woman who was in the western town at the time of Joe's capture. Mary learns of her husband's infidelity and goes to him to plead for his reformation. Upon her entrance into the room, the singer who has been there with the husband, hides herself in an adjoining closet where she sees and hears all that takes place. After Mary's departure, she tells the husband about the episode in the West and that Mary is married to a criminal. The husband immediately starts divorce proceedings. He will not listen to Mary's side of the story. He sends for and receives the register which he holds as evidence of Mary's previous marriage. Joe is nowhere to be found, so Mary cannot get his testimony regarding the affair.

About this time the city is thrown into a furore by the news that a second story man is working there, and always eluding the police. This gives Mary an idea. She decides to enter the office of her husband's attorney and steal the evidence contained in the register. She puts on man's clothing and effects an entrance. At the same time, the second story worker enters the same house from another window. They encounter each other in the dark and Joe flashes a light in her face before shooting. He recognizes his sister and is making an explanation when a detective who has seen Mary enter the house, comes into the room. The detective fires at Mary in the dark and wounds her. The noise brings in the lawyer and Mary's husband, who is in conference with him in another part of the house.

Mary, wounded, insists upon telling her story. They listen, and when she has finished, Joe comes forward and confesses himself the escaped criminal and corroborates all she has said. In the face of this, Mary's innocence is not to be doubted and a reconciliation follows. Through the power and influence of Mary's husband, Joe's path in it all is kept from the police, and he reforms.

LADY KILLERS (Phunphilm—April 19).—Heinie and Louie come upon a person and a large bag. In accordance with their time-honored custom, they steal the bag and rush off with it to the nearest hostelry, which happens to be a "ladies' only" establishment. Heinie and Louie never have been in a "ladies' only" hotel before and feel that their young lives have been wasted. They open their stolen bundle and find it contains a bomb, which Heinie with characteristic caution cleverly conceals beneath a mass of papers in the trash basket in Louie's room.

Louie comes in, sits down, takes out cigarette! Match—basket—bomb—boom! After making his way through many walls and ceilings, Louie finds himself in Heinie's lap. Heinie has no kick coming, though, because he himself is using someone's lap, and Heinie and Louie are the only two men in the place. He has no regard for life, particularly Louie's, and drops his henchman out of the window. Louie, the luckless, lands on the collaborating beans of two detectives in search of a bomb-thrower. Louie, to get even, says Heinie is the only bomb-thrower he knows, and the sleuths go after the heinous one. Here things get very complicated and look bad for the boys until the only real, original, endorsed bomb-thrower is caught and dragged off to the lockup.

SIBERIA, THE VAST UNKNOWN, NO. 5 (Pathe—April 22).—This installment shows the Siberian natives trading their furs with the Russian dealers. This is an episode that the Pathe film follows from the start of the journey of both parties, over 4,000 miles of snow on dog and reindeer sleds, to the trading town of Pentilayka. Here many interesting things happen that make this half-reel one of rare interest.

GLIMPSES OF SAN FRANCISCO (Pathe—On same reel as foregoing).—Many beautiful statues and ornate buildings make San Francisco pleasing to the eye. Among the sculptural and architectural beauties shown are the monument erected to the memory of Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner;" the statue of James A. Garfield, twentieth President of the United States; the Federal Building, which contains the post office and the Customs Department; the group statue of the great Goethe and Schiller; the drinking fountain presented to the city by the California Midwinter International Exposition in 1894; the Museum of Natural History; the bronze vase by Gustave Dore, which stands in front of the Museum of Natural History; the Sun Dial, and the bust of U. THE IRON CLAW ("The Stroke of Twelve," No. 8—Pathe—Two Parts—April 17).—Margery Golden becomes engaged to the Count Fugi Da Espares, a guest in her father's home, but who in reality is a confederate of Legar, the arch-plotter. Da Espares persuades Margery to join him in a scheme to capture Legar, really intending, however, that Legar shall kidnap Margery. Da Espares and Legar are foiled by Davy, Golden's secretary, who is in love with Margery. Da Espares saves himself from suspicion and Margery believes he is "The Laughing Mask," the mysterious enemy of Legar, and all other wrongdoers. Margery's father gives a costumed dinner dance in honor of her betrothal. Legar plans to blow up the Golden mansion, but the Laughing Mask sounds a warning in the nick of time. Da Espares is killed in the explosion. Legar escapes. In the previous episodes Legar has been branded and mutilated by Golden and has vowed vengeance. But who is The Laughing Mask? See the next episode. It is called "Arrows of Hate."

Triangle Film Corp.

LITTLE MEENA'S ROMANCE (Fine Arts—Five Parts—April 9).—The cast: Dorothy Gish, Owen Moore, Fred J. Butler, Robert Lawler, Alberta Lee, Mazie Radford, George Pierce, Fred A. Turner, Kate Toncray, Margaret Marsh, James O'Shea, and William H. Brown.

Meena Bauer is the heroine of this romance of a Pennsylvania Dutch girl, who is loved by the son of a Mennonite family. Meena treats Jacob as a joke in spite of the arrangement their parents have made that they should wed. The Mennonite simplicity has no charms for Meena who proceeds to fall in love with Count Fredrich von Ritz, who is temporarily out of funds and comes to the little Pennsylvania town as a canvasser for a clothes wringer. Meena wants her father to buy one, but the latter believes that woman's hands were made for that work. Von Ritz next goes to the home of the town constable, where he is arrested for peddling without a license.

Arraigned before Squire Bauer the prisoner is fined. He cannot pay and faces jail until Meena suggests that he be allowed to sell wringers until he makes enough to pay the fine. In partnership the count and Meena go and soon sales are brisk. Now comes the time when von Ritz receives a check from his estate and with sad farewell of Meena he returns to New York. Soon Meena follows her father having died leaving much property, to live with relative in the metropolis.

Here she finds many servants to do the work but they are an unclean lot and Meena takes a scrubbing assignment and is busily at work on the front steps when the count comes along with a present for her cousin. He thinks she is working out, she thinks he is canvassing with a new line. They meet often and one night von Ritz takes her to a noisy resort near the city. Before they return they have stopped at the minister's across the road. She does not return home and search the next morning finds her in her new apartments. Only then do the newlyweds discover each other's true identity. Von Ritz has married a rich wife and little Meena is a countess.

THE ARYAN (Kay Bee—Five Parts—April 9).—The cast: William S. Hart, Bessie Love, Louise Glaum, Charles K. French, Gertrude Claire, Hershel Mayall and Swallow.

Steve Denton rides into Yellow Ridge with a money belt filled after years of toil in the mines beyond the desert. The local gamblers covet the fortune but fail to get Steve to try the roulette table until the enticer, Trixie, comes to exercise her charms on him. He blindly follows her lead and is watching the wheel with stern stare when a telegram is received. He asks the woman to read it. She lies when she says it contains good news, for it tells of the critical illness of his mother.

In the morning Steve awakes to find his belt is empty. In his feverish search through his pockets he comes upon the telegram. As the truth dawns he goes to the telegraph office to send a wire home. The operator hands him the news that his mother has died. Wild with rage, he shoots up the town and drives away with Trixie lying limp over his horse before him. His heart is now filled with hate for all women and Trixie becomes his slave in a community where he tolerates only the scum of the section.

Across the desert comes a pack train of Mississippi farmers who have left their fertile valleys to hunt for gold. Their water is all but gone and their stock is fagged. Their leaders plead with Steve for aid, but the white race may expect nothing from him. Back to the wailing women and children go the despondent leaders. Mary Jane, a waif among them, is not cowed by the story they tell. She goes at night to repeat their pleas to the harsh white man. He looks upon her as another victim to share Trixie's lot, but her innocent and fearless attitude toward him makes him hesitate.

Meanwhile his men have carried off the women of the train. As the men pursue and there is bloodshed in the air, Steve yields to the little girl. He trades the safety of those people for his rich mine, leaves his wealth to his followers and guides the strangers out of the desert.

Miscellaneous Subjects

WORLD EQUITABLE.

THE SOCIAL HIGHWAYMAN (Peerless—Five parts—April 17).—The cast: John Jaffray and Curtis Jaffray (Edwin August), Hanby (John Sampolis); Countess Rossi (Ormi Hawley), Eleanor Hilton (Alice Clair Elliott); Hugh Jaffray (Noah Beery). Directed by Edwin August.

Sir Curtis Jaffray (as he becomes known in later life) is the offspring of a mesalliance which results in his being brought up in such bitter poverty that his mother, before his birth, is driven to thievery to obtain food. This incident stamps a fatal prenatal influence upon the child.

At the age of twelve, Curtis, whose predatory instincts have already manifested themselves in numerous small ways, stows away upon a ship bound for America, rather than accept the home and upbringing his grandfather, Sir Hugh Jaffray offers him. On the same vessel is John Hanby, another stowaway, who is destined to be a sinister influence in Jaffray's life.

He becomes Jaffray's social secretary several years later when, on the death of his grandfather Jaffray inherits the title and estates. The fashionable stratum of society in which Jaffray now moves is startled by a series of daring thefts. The situation is complicated by the suspicion of Countess Rossi, a leader of the social world, that Jaffray is "The Social Highwayman."

The Countess is the woman who, years before, ruined Hanby's life and made of him an outcast. Driven half insane by the recollection of his wrongs, Hanby in a frenzy, kills the Countess but not before she has set the police on Jaffray's track. By a daring ruse Jaffray escapes the authorities.

In the meantime the demented Hanby kills himself, declaring that he committed the mystifying thefts. Jaffray, his nobler instincts now aroused, confesses everything to the girl he loves and sets about rebuilding his life, to be worthy of her.

BY WHOSE HAND? (Equitable—Five Parts—April 17).—The cast: Edith Maitland (Edna Wallace Hopper); John Maitland (Charles J. Ross); Helen Maitland (Muriel Ostriche); Kimba (Nicholas Suneaw); Simon Baird (John Dillon); David Sterling (James Ryley). Scenario written by C. Pollock and R. Wolf. Directed by James Durkin.

Dave Sterling, superintendent of the Maitland Estate, is in love with Helen Maitland, his employer's daughter. The father, however, refuses to give consent until Sterling can show at least $10,000. Sterling has saved $5,000. He has invented a machine, in which an agent interests a wealthy land owner, Simon Baird.

THE UNWRITTEN LAW

Booked by All Leading Theatres Through EXCLUSIVE FEATURES, Inc. JOSEPH M. GOLDSTEIN President

71 WEST 23d STREET, NEW YORK CITY 566 SO. SALINA STREET, SYRACUSE

Baird comes to see Sterling, finds some petty flaw in it and flaunts the five $1,000 bills in Sterling's face, which he had come prepared to spend if the invention were satisfactory. Helen notices that one of these bills had been torn and pasted together again. Sterling persuades Baird to stay overnight—in which time he can remedy the defects in the machine—and Baird, attracted by Helen, decides to stay at the Maitland house.

A look of hatred appears on the face of the negro servant, Kimba, when he sees Baird. Mutual recognition between Baird and Mrs. Maitland, fear and distrust on the face of the latter, a hated look of recognition between Baird and Maitland. Baird's shadow, as he places his wallet on the table before retiring for the night, appears on the window shade, where it is noticed by Sterling, Mrs. Maitland and Mr. Maitland, who pass by in the garden at intervals a few minutes apart. In the morning, just as Sterling is showing Helen ten $1,000 bills, a servant rushes in with word of Baird's murder.

Sterling is arrested—the empty wallet and the money throwing suspicion his way. At the trial Helen testifies against the man she loves, establishing his motive for the crime. Kimba's testimony brings out the reason for his look of hatred at seeing Baird. Years before when Maitland and Baird were mining partners, Baird had been inhuman in his treatment of their servant, Kimba. Next—John Maitland's testimony, showing his reason for hating Baird, who had stolen from him his lawful profits in their mining venture. Mrs. Maitland's testimony brings out the story of how, when she was a singer in the picturesque Honkatonk in South Africa, Baird had betrayed and deserted her. After Baird's departure, Maitland falls in love with the girl and marries her ignorant of her former relations with Baird. Baird, the evening of his murder on meeting the woman again as Maitland's wife, threatened to tell her husband. He flaunted in her face the five $1,000 bills which he had refused to give her in years gone by and left them on the table. Sterling, coming into the room, not knowing from where the money had come, accepts it as a loan from Mrs. Maitland.

Her testimony clears Sterling, but the question arises: "Is she lying to save the man her daughter loves?" Mrs. Maitland says she is guilty, which is promptly denied by Sterling, who says he is the guilty one. Question on screen, "Is he lying to save the mother of the woman he loves?" An acquittal from the jury, and the audience is left wondering who killed Simon Baird.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER—NO. 9, "Out of Order" (April 26).—Musty Suffer, yearning earnestly for a quiet, easy and reposeful job, calls upon his faithful fairy to provide it for him. He is taken to an amusement arcade where he is hypnotized by one of the freaks in the show, provided with a gorgeous uniform in a jiffy and assigned to the job of ticket taker, chief janitor, boot black, "spieler," hat cleaner, target in a shooting gallery and superintendent of an escalator. In addition to these few duties Musty was assigned to run chores and entertain the freaks in the museum. Musty finds great pleasure in working the escalator leading to the moving picture theater but the "bouncing" of patrons who fail to go through the formality of buying tickets is one of his chief difficulties, but one which he overcomes promptly when he discovers the reverse action of the escalator. Musty also has several discouraging adventures with the wild man, the lion, the bearded lady, etc., which escape periodically from the museum or the menagerie, but meets each emergency in some ingenious way.

MOLLY MAKE-BELIEVE (Famous Players—Five Parts—April 10).—The cast: Molly (Marguerite Clark); Carl Stanton (Mahlon Hamilton); Bobby Meredith (Master Dick Gray); Cornelia Bartlett (Helen Dahl); Grandmother Meredith (Gertrude Norman); Sam Rogers, engineer (J. W. Johnston); Mr. Wendal (Edwin Mordant).

Molly is an irrepressible young lady who decamps from her grandmother's farm where she learns of the dire poverty with which they are threatened. Coming to the city, she seeks a position and failing to find one, hits upon the scheme of writing letters to invalids for the purpose of cheering them along the road to recovery. It so happens that her only subscriber is Carl Stanton, in whom she has already taken a violent interest. Carl is totally ignorant of the identity of his little correspondent until matters reach a climax which brings about a revelation of the fact that it is none other than Molly.

THE GAY LORD WARING (Five Parts—April 24).—The cast: Lord Arthur Waring (J. Warren Kerrigan); Helene Von Gerold (Lois Wilson); Mark Waring (Bertram Grassby); Countess Olga Imani (Maud George); O'Grady, money lender (H. Holland); Von Gerold (Duke Worne). Scenario by F. McGrew Willis. Directed by Otis Turner.

Having been disowned by his father, through the influence of his brother, and also because of his profligate habits, Lord Waring has borrowed all he can from O'Grady, the money lender, and is compelled to abandon his association with Countess Olga Imani. He retires to his country seat and while horseback riding one day collides with the horse ridden by Helene Von Gerold, and the girl is seriously injured.

Feeling that he is obliged to pay for surgical treatment of the girl, Lord Waring goes to his brother and borrows an immense sum, practically giving his life as security. The brother covets the title of Lord Waring and his Lordship promises to return the borrowed money "if he is alive" within six months.

On attempting to arrange for the treatment of Helene, the discovery is made by Lord Waring that his brother has anticipated him. Secretly Mark Waring learns that Helene is rich, her father being owner of valuable tin deposits on the continent. Mark covets the girl and her wealth, but Helene is in love with Lord Waring.

Balked in his desire to spend the money to a good purpose, Lord Waring goes to London and starts once more living at high speed. He pays back the money he owes to O'Grady, telling the money lender where he got it, and the conditions of the loan. O'Grady bets Lord Waring an immense sum that he will not fulfill the implied purpose of the bet and kill himself at the date appointed.

As the time comes for Lord Waring to settle, O'Grady fears that he will lose his bet, and hires assassins to kill Mark Waring, believing that suspicion will fall on his Lordship and that he will be imprisoned long enough to at least lose his wager. The plot fails and the day arrives when Lord Waring must settle his accounts.

The miser, Von Gerold, is in the act of counting his hoard when he overturns a lamp, fires his home and the life of himself and crippled daughter is endangered. Lord Waring, in the very act of committing suicide, hears the alarm and rushes to Von Gerold's house. With reckless daring he rescues the crippled girl and her father, but the old man is too much overcome by smoke and excitement, ultimately dying.

Mark Waring is driving on a country road when he sees the smoke that arises from the fire at Von Gerold's home. He drives recklessly toward the scene, a wheel of his carriage strikes an obstruction, Waring is thrown out and killed when his head strikes against a stone.

The way is thus cleared to a happy ending, Lord Waring coming into all his brother's estate. Helene discovers she is immensely wealthy and the story ends with the prospective marriage of Lord Waring and Helene.

THE KISS OF HATE (Columbia—Five parts—April 3.).—When Count Peter Turgeneff, his daughter, Nadia, and Paul, his generous-hearted son, came to live in the Governor's palace in the Russian province of Valogda, there was rejoicing among the oppressed race whose home was in the Ghetto. Turgeneff was known as a just and merciful man, who had done much to make the hard lot of the Jews bearable in the districts under his charge. Hence his coming was hailed with joy by Isaac, prophet of Israel, and his people. Quite other feelings did his arrival create in the breast of Michael Orzoff, the grim Prefect of Police of Valogda, who sat in his office in the fortress and received the reports of the secret agents of the Czar.

It was known that Orzoff was the secret power behind the dreaded "Yellow Jackets," the dire organization, whose avowed object was the extermination of the people of Israel. There seemed no help. The Prefect's influence reached far, even into the high places in far-off Petrograd. Even women, provided they were fair to look upon, found their sex no protection from his infamy.

For all these reasons the coming of Count Turgeneff to Valogda was not at all to Orzoff's liking. Soon after his coming Orzoff learned two things; one was that the new governor had pledged his help to the jews, and the other that Nadia, his daughter, was one of the most beautiful women he had ever seen and quite as ardent as her father in her support of the oppressed race. To think was to act with Orzoff. The governor was strong, but not more strong than he. In the high places in Petrograd, whence both received authority, the Prefect held the more power. In Russia the police are all powerful. The Count menaced Orzoff, for already word had been brought to the Governor, as Orzoff well knew, that the Prefect was the secret driving force behind the evil "Yellow Jackets."

So Orzoff laid his plan. With his countless agents, commissaries and secret minions in the "Yellow Jackets," daring as that plan was, he felt it could not fail. On the night of the grand ball at the Governor's palace the plan was consummated. Father had come at Nadia's urging, Isaac, chief of the Jews of the Ghetto, and Leah, the lovely daughter of old Samuels, the cobbler, whose honor had been stained by the rude lust of Orzoff, with many others, there to accuse the Prefect face to face of the wrongs with which he had burdened them. But they did not reckon with the Prefect's plan.

Suddenly there had been a cry without; a rush of many feet and a frenzied mob had burst in among the guests of the Governor. "Death to the Jews!" was their rallying cry. Then came Orzoff's own anti-Jewish men and dispersed the rioters. But not before an assassin's bullet had found a resting place in the heart of Count Turgeneff.

Nor did Orzoff stop there. Secure in his influence at Petrograd he directed his men to seize the weeping Nadia, her brother, Paul, and Leah, the Jew and imprison them in the fortress under a charge of treason. And there on the gay tolwing he found a way to wreak his evil will upon the girl.

The Prefect came to her in the cell, where she passed the night. He bent over her scornfully as she sat on the stone seat that had formed her couch.

"You will give yourself to me," he said abruptly, "or your brother shall suffer the torture by fire ere he goes to Siberia."

There in Nadia, in contempt and loathing struck at him in the bitterness he asked: "Listen and you shall hear for yourself—only your promised word can stop his pain."

THE HALF MILLION BRIBE (Columbia—Five parts—April 10.)—While Arthur Hargraves, S. P. Hargraves was found in a room in the rear of Crowleytown, a gambling house, with a bullet in his heart the police found the key. Pemmican, the manager of the place, coolly pacing the floor when they arrived. He demanded that the district attorney be informed. When District Attorney Murgatroyd arrived Pemmican led the way to a bedroom where stretched full length upon a couch was J. Lawrence Challoner, a young clubman, in a drunken stupor. "He is the man who murdered the Colonel," Pemmican said the district attorney, who aroused the clubman, and began questioning him.

While Murgatroyd was telephoning his office for an assistant and Pemmican was directing the arrangement of overturned furniture in the main gambling room Challoner managed to make his escape. A city-wide search for Challoner was ordered by the district attorney, but no trace was found of him. Challoner had intended to go home to his wife, but as he walked through the side streets realized that he would be walking into a trap, so he turned and made for the East Side, finally bringing up in a cheap lodging house off the Bowery. The next day he telephoned his wife and asked her to bring him funds and said he intended leaving for Europe on a freight carrying steamship out of Philadelphia. She advised him against this and pleaded with him to give himself up. With her fortune of half a million dollars she could hire the best legal talent in the city for him, she pointed out.

Murgatroyd was greatly surprised when he arrived at his office and found both Challoner and his wife waiting for him. She asked to speak with him alone, after Challoner had been turned over to an officer. In his private office Mrs. Challoner made a deal with Murgatroyd to the effect that he would clear her husband's name. For this he was to receive securities that she held valued at half a million dollars. At the trial both Challoner and his wife were amazed when Murgatroyd prosecuted the case in a vigorous manner. And while the trial was in progress he even spent one night with Challoner, giving him the "third degree," and finally obtaining a confession from him. This confession was introduced at the trial the following day, and together with Pemmican's testimony and the testimony of a maid, who had heard Challoner and Hargraves quarreling in Letty Love's apartment, made a case that convinced the jury of Challoner's guilt.

Mrs. Challoner followed Murgatroyd into his office and threatened to expose him for accepting a bribe. "I promised to save your husband," Murgatroyd said, "but I did not say when or how I would save him." A few weeks later Pemmican got into a row with some gamblers in a rival house. One of the men shot Pemmican, and when the physician reached his side they told him there was no hope for his recovery. Pemmican sent for Murgatroyd, who was told that it was he who had killed the Colonel, who with Challoner was fighting to gain Letty Love his (Pemmican's) wife. Then the gambler died in the arms of his wife.

Murgatroyd went to the prison where he saw Challoner and told him he had obtained a false confession. The district attorney arranged for Challoner's release and advised him to drop out of sight. In a modest little apartment on the East Side Challoner and his wife set up housekeeping. Everything was progressing nicely, until Challoner became discouraged and again took to drinking. One evening when he returned to the apartment after drinking heavily, his insistent demands for money roused his long-suffering wife to action. Instead of handing him the money, as Challoner expected, she drew a revolver from the folds of her gown and threatened to shoot him if he advanced a step toward her. It was a revelation of his wife's character and Challoner fell to his knee and began to cry like a child. It proved the turning point in their lives. Challoner never drank again.

Soon after this his wife confided a secret to him. A baby is soon to be born to them. Challoner became melancholy and said: "I cannot bear the thoughts of having a little one come into the world, the child of a murderer." When they arrived home from their little walk they found Shirley Bloodgood, one of the few society girl friends of Mrs. Challoner, who had remained steadfast during her trouble. They insisted on Shirley remaining to dinner, and that night the trio discussed many matters of the past. For Shirley was engaged to marry Murgatroyd, and she had tried to use her good offices in Challoner's behalf on several occasions. What became of Mrs. Challoner's fortune had always been a mystery to her friends, and during the course of the evening Shirley inquired of Mrs. Challoner where it had gone. Against the wishes of Challoner, his wife told Shirley that the money went to obtain her husband's freedom.

"Mr. Challoner, I think you have made a mistake," Shirley said, at last. "You know that any man who would take the last penny a woman has is capable of doing anything. How do you know that the confession Mr. Murgatroyd obtained was not real? I would never stop until I found out."

The very next day Challoner set about on a quiet investigation. Within a week he did find out that the confession was genuine, and that Murgatroyd lied to him. It required but little time for Mrs. Challoner, Shirley and Mr. Challoner to arrange a joint call upon the district attorney.

Murgatroyd merely smiled when the trio swooped down upon him with their charges. After hearing a recital of their feelings he went to a large safe in the corner, opened it and took out the securities that Mrs. Challoner had given him. He had never touched them from the day he had received them.

"There is every penny you gave me, Mrs. Challoner," he said. "I think you will all thank me when I explain. And I am going to be very frank. It was Mrs. Challoner's money that made a fool and idler of her husband. He needed to be set right, and drastic treatment was necessary. There was plenty of manhood in him, but he had to be put through the fire. I realized that the only way to save Challoner was to reduce him to poverty. There have been times when my heart ached for him, and I wanted to tell you all the truth. I could tell you—but what's the use? I think we all understand now."

That night at Sherry's there were covers laid for four, and it was a merry party.

PLAYING WITH FIRE (Popular Plays and Players—Five parts—April 17).—Jean Servian had been at work at her bench since early morning, rounding out the final rough mask of a cameo with her fine chisels. She was fatigued, and stopped every few minutes to draw her hand across her eyes. Lucille Vane, who was sitting for the cameo, inquired if Jean was suffering with a headache. Jean replied that her eyes were very tired.

When Godfrey Lane, the father of Lucille, and a man of great wealth, entered the studio a few minutes later, he found his daughter placing a wet bandage over Jean's eyes. Mr. Lane had grown extremely fond of Jean, and found that while at his office he continually longed for the time to come when he would call and see the artist at work. At first he thought it was only his earnest desire to be at the side of his child, to whom he had been more and more a companion since the death of her mother, four years before.

Mr. Vane stood in silence, looking upon the motherly attention of his daughter. Gently he asked if he could do anything. Just then Lucille removed the bandage from Jean's eyes, and, and to the astonishment of all, the artist exclaimed, "I cannot see." Mr. Lane immediately sumoned a specialist, who, after an examination, said that there was only one thing to do—Jean would have to take a prolonged rest away from the studio, if she was ever to see again. After considerable persuasion, Jean finally accepted Mr. Lane's proposal to stay at his country home for at least two weeks. Mr. Lane's infatuation had now grown to a strong love for the artist. Lucille's time was taken up, for the most part, with her tutors, and Mr. Lane would relieve the nurse and take Jean for walks.

One day he proposed to Jean. Jean, who had surmised that such a question would be asked her, had been turning over the matter in her mind, and decided it probably would be best for her to accept. The evening that Jean engaged herself to her host the bandages were removed from her eyes and she could see. The marriage was performed at an early date, and a couple of months later Jean received a letter from Rosa Derblay, her chum and fellow-artist, who worked across the hall from her when she lived in the studio. Rosa said she had a surprise in store for Jean, and hoped she could "break away from her beloved husband," as she expressed it, for at least a week-end in the city. Jean turned the letter over to her husband, who graciously gave his consent. Rosa greeted her old friend affectionately, and they made their way to the familiar studio of Rosa. The surprise she had in store for Jean was the fact that Rosa's brother had returned from Paris a fortnight before, and Rosa had set him up in Jean's old studio. Jean found Philip, the brother, a delightful companion, and the trio had many good times together. They visited the rendezvous of the Bohemians for their dinners and their nightly amusements. One night, after they had lingered over their dinner unusually long, Rosa received a call from a friend uptown, saying she had suddenly fallen ill and would Rosa look in for an hour, at least. Jean insisted on going along, but Rosa would not listen to this, and admonished her brother to take good care of Jean, see her home, and added that she would join them at the studio later.

After Rosa had gone, Philip continued to order more chianti, over the gentle protests of Jean. Shortly before ten o'clock they left, and when they mounted the steps leading to the studio, Philip asked her to step into his studio to look at a few of his paintings while waiting for Rosa. Once inside the studio, Philip surreptitiously locked the door behind them, and then began to make love to the terror-stricken Jean. Then the steps of Rosa were heard upon the bottom stairs. More for the love of Rosa than any other thing, Jean did not speak of the outrage. The next day, after offering a logical excuse, Jean left and returned to her home. A year later Jean was again called to Rosa's studio, but it was not for a holiday in town. Rosa had been stricken with a fatal malady and died before Jean reached her side. While in the city Jean learned from some of her friends that Philip had been keeping company with a strange, but pretty little girl, whom he boasted was quite wealthy, and that he intended to marry her. This did not arouse any interest on the part of Jean until she further learned that the girl was none other than Lucille, her step-daughter. Lucille had been attending boarding school in the city, and had promised Philip she would run away with him when her present term was completed.

Jean hurried to Lucille, but she would not listen. Jean then told her step-daughter what kind of a man Philip was, but this had no effect upon her. Jean then threatened Philip with exposure if he did not leave Lucille at once, but he remarked that if Jean did not keep her mouth closed he would go immediately and tell her husband. That evening Jean recited in detail to her husband her experience with Philip in the studio. She had implicit faith in her husband's bigness of character. But he failed her in this crisis. Like his daughter, he immediately placed the blame on Jean herself, and in a rage ordered her from his home. Jean left for the city, and made her way in an aimless manner to her old haunts. Instinctively, her steps led to her old studio, but she desired to see Philip less than any person living. In the street she saw a figure darting in and out, as if to avoid attention. It was Lucille. Philip, fearing his plans would be frustrated, and that Jean's husband would believe her story, had determined on desperate measures. Through a ruse he had invited Lucille to his studio, saying he was ill.

Jean followed Lucille at a safe distance. She saw her enter the hall leading to Philip's studio. Jean followed and waited outside. Suddenly she heard Lucille scream. Jean broke the door and fired at Philip, killing him. At the Lane home, where Jean was fast becoming her old self again under the tender care of her husband and Lucille, all three decided that they would do their best to be the happy trio they had been in the days when first Jean had come to visit the Lane country house.

THE LAW DECIDES (Vitagraph—Five Parts—April 24).—The cast: John Wharton (Donald Hall); Florence Wharton (Dorothy Kelly); Lorenz (Harry Morey); Bobby Wharton (Bobby Connelly); Mrs. Wharton (Louise Beaudet); Beatrice, her daughter (Adele Kelly); Maid (Bonnie Taylor). Author, Marguerite Bertsch. Director, Wm. P. S. Earle.

Mere years could not kill the overwhelming love which lay dormant in Lorenz's heart, though Florence was now the wife of another. He called frequently at the Wharton home; ostensibly to see Beatrice, the daughter of Wharton's step-mother, but really to be near Mrs. Wharton, who was the Florence he loved.

Despite the fact that John Wharton has been married for years and is very happy with his wife and son Bobby, Mrs. Wharton has not given up hope of a union between John and her daughter, Beatrice. She has always been greedy for John's fortune, and knows that if her daughter was to marry him, the fortune would revert to them. One night Lorenz, unable to subdue his passion, renews his suit to Florence, but is spurned. Mrs. Wharton, having seen that Lorenz would go to any extremities to win the hand of Florence, enlists him in her cause with the promise of Florence for his wife if the plans succeed. Later, when John enters the house, he sees his wife running away from Lorenz, as if alarmed at his approach. His suspicions are aroused, and when his mother makes the evidence more conclusive, he seems to agree with her. That night Florence leaves for a hunting lodge, where she hopes to stay until John repents his hasty words. At the lodge she finds Lorenz already there. He purposely misses his train home and, having a spare room, she agrees to shelter him for the night. Mrs. Wharton tells John where his wife is, and allows him to understand that Lorenz is with her. John starts for the lodge and on finding Lorenze there is convinced of his wife's perfidy. He sues for a divorce and the courts award the custody of the child to the father. Florence chooses the only honorable alternative left to her and marries Lorenz, but shows him no affection.

Mrs. Wharton's plans are at last beginning to materialize. In order to please his mother, for whom he has always had the greatest respect, John agrees to marry Beatrice. On the day of the wedding, Florence calls and through her little son Bobby learns that John really loves her. Lorenz meanwhile has spoken to Beatrice, telling the sorrow which his loveless marriage has caused, and warning her against marrying John. She finally consents to go away with him. Still unable to forget his overpowering love for Florence, he leaves a note for her, telling where she may reach him, so that she might decide whether or not she wanted him to return.

At the Wharton home the disappearance of the bride has caused great consternation. Here Florence learns of the part John's mother played in her estrangement from her husband. Hoping to arrange matters in some way before it is too late, she 'phones to Lorenz, who hurries over to the house. Lorenz sees that all is known, and, having a spark of honor left in him, makes a supreme sacrifice in a dramatic and unexpected suicide, leaving the reunited family to their unmolested happiness. Beatrice and her mother go on a sea voyage, the latter repentant and sufficiently punished for her crime by her daughter's unhappiness.

MR. JACK GOES INTO BUSINESS (April 24).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Frank Daniels); His Wife (Rose E. Tapley); Building Supt. (William Gilson); Face Powder Salesman (Edward Boulden). Author, Bruno Lessing. Director, C. J. Williams.

Jack finds his calling at last. At his wife's request, he goes into business, and you can just guess what kind of a business he picks out. That's right. He opens a theatrical agency for ladies only, and more congenial labor never could be invented so far as Jack is concerned. Business flourishes the first day, and Jack has a bevy of queens in the office, so he hangs up the handy "closed for the day" signs and starts rehearsing. Mrs. Jack, at home, is impatient for his return, and finally, unable to wait any longer, starts out for the office. Sounds of revelry greet her ears at the door of her husband's office, but when she enters, all she can see is Jack at the telephone, and various covers, which had just been removed from the new furniture, lying all over the floor. She is puzzled until she sees a dainty size three foot protruding from one of the covers. It would cause great sorrow to relate the tragic incidents which followed. Suffice it to say that the sign on the office now reads "closed for good."

Reliability, Compactness and Efficiency

Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converters

Combining the alternating current motor and the direct current generator in a single machine, the Wagner Converter is compact and efficient. It can be installed in the average projection booth. It is simple to install and simple to operate. It is built in the third largest electrical plant in the United States, by engineers of vast experience. The name Wagner on electrical apparatus has come to be the "Sterling" mark in the world of electricity. This is your assurance of reliable projection.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

Furnished as the regular equipment of the latest models of Power's, Simplex and Baird Machines and conceded to give the best results by thousands of theatre owners using these and other makes of machines. There must be a very potent reason why Gundlach Projection Lenses have replaced nearly all other lenses formerly in use and why they are given the preference by the United States War Department, The Lyman H. Howe Co., and the biggest theatre circuits in the country.

Try them and see for yourself how a picture looks made by Gundlach Projection Lenses.

ON THE ITALIAN BATTLEFRONT

"Five reels of the most thrilling war films ever shown to any audience"

Hair-Raising, Heart-Throbbing Actions in Real Fighting!

Executed under the direction and control of the SUPREME COMMAND of the

Italian General Staff

and bearing its official seal.

Here is what "Film," the foremost authority in Italy—classed as the "Moving Picture World" in America—published in its issue of March 20, 1916, of these Official War Films:

"Each single scene represents an important contribution to history, rendered more authoritative by the approval of the General Staff, and the whole spectacle, magnet-like, draws and holds the intense enthusiasm of the audience to the end. The assaults of the Alpine Troops,* the preparations of battle, the troop formation in trenches are so well reproduced that we cannot help from thinking of the courage of which the operator has given proof, exposing his life often, to evident danger."

WANTED—Magazine stories in motion pictures—about 200 feet each, including titles. Novel ideas of national interest, inventions clearly explained by close-ups, unusual photographic effects, and trick pictures—except animated cartoons.

Anything novel will receive prompt attention and will be returned express prepaid, without delay, if found unsuitable. Negatives will be received with or without test print. Full list of suggested titles should be included.

The free lance now has a market with Paramount Pictographs—"The Magazine on the Screen" (not a news weekly). Send in your name for our list; we will keep you advised as to our wants. Address Pictograph Division.

MIRROROID

Write—do it now—for our large, free samples. Test, compare with any screen on earth.

Therefore use the brains God gave you.

Why pay from 50 to 75 cents a square foot for a coated window shade?

Mirroroid is made in 3 tints—silver white, pale gold, silver flesh—all 33 1-3 cents a square foot.

The screen that is used by over 9,500 exhibitors, leading colleges, state, public and government institutions.

The screen that is the result of a definite purpose to supply a definite need, definite results and finality.

Now made absolutely seamless—with that uniformity of surface and matte finish that so many tried hard to imitate.

Increased factory facilities, latest coating machinery (our own) enables us to make this statement: We can turn out, ready for shipment, more screens in one day than all of our competitors put together can in a month.

Results --- Mirroroid --- Is now sold for 33 1-3 Cents a Square Foot; $3.00 a Square Yard

You have the reasons. We are satisfied to reduce our price, because facilities and complete organization give us complete control of the situation. Our profits are satisfactory in every way.

Realize we are the oldest, the largest, the pioneer screen manufacturers of the world.

Mirroroid is guaranteed for five years against cracking, peeling or turning in color.

It is the only screen that will give you true perspective and color tone. Eliminating all eye strain, hazy, out-of-focus effect, and fade-a-way at close up or angle view. A very pronounced defect in all other metalized screens.

Experience!!

EXPERIENCE

according to Webster, is to "know or prove by trial," and that's exactly what we have been doing in the handling of projection apparatus FOR MORE THAN TWENTY YEARS!

Is easily the biggest word in the English language. It is the answer to success or failure—efficiency or incompetence!

EXPERIENCE

has neither LENGTH, BREADTH nor DEPTH yet it can be seen—and seen quickly, too, in your purchases of projection apparatus!

Don't regard projection equipment as a mere collection of gears, cast iron, glass and sheet metal. Insist upon service—reliability—dependability—three essentials to be found only in the stable, substantial character of the house that executes your order.

Representative exhibitors of the better class everywhere confine their purchases to us—and the older, wiser and more experienced they are the more certain are we to please them.

The Best Built Projector in America

Can you afford to purchase a projector that is not made of the best material and is only a short-life machine?

The MOTIOGRAPH is built to project rock-steady pictures at small cost of up-keep.

FRAME—High grade gray iron castings,—not a composition of lead and zinc.

BEARINGS—4 high grade phosphor bronze bearings on Cam Shafts, hardened and ground.

SLIDING DISC CONNECTION—made of high grade steel, hardened and ground, is taking the place of the ball arbor used in former models and insures a steady picture at a high rate of speed.

OTHER PARTS OF THE MECHANISM are made of the same high grade material and receive the same treatment.

GEARS—All steel, known as the Never-Wear-Out Gears.

LAMPHOUSE—made of high grade material, asbestos lined.

ARC LAMP all necessary adjustments.

THE LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH—a Projector that is made right and priced right for the conservative buyer.

TransVerteR

Perfect Light Control

Easy As Turning Gas Up Or Down

When a film demands more or less light, you can always get it as you need it with Transverter equipment.

At the will of the operator, the amperage can readily be regulated to light or dark pictures as easily as turning gas up or down.

At the same time, the voltage lowers or increases automatically in proportion to the changing length of the arc.

The Transverter is the last word in projection equipment. It insures a perfect arc, a steady, bright, white light, and more artistic projection of pictures without waste of current.

If you want better pictures, larger attendances and bigger profits, you need the Transverter.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

My dear Mr. Richardson:

After having carefully perused the third edition of your Hand Book, it gives me great pleasure to express my admiration for the wonderful manner in which you have handled this difficult work, and I feel that you are to be highly commended for the energy and intelligence displayed in compiling the really valuable information.

The new Hand Book surpasses the previous editions and it should certainly be in the hands of all operators and others using motion picture projection machines.

Wishing you continued success and with very kindest regards and best wishes, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

THE BEST LONG DISTANCE PROJECTION

Was at the WORLD'S FAMOUS NEW YORK HIPPODROME, which was equipped by B. F. Porter. The picture was so large, bright and clear that the smallest details could be seen at a distance of over 300 feet. The front seats were 80 feet from the screen. This was the Brightest Picture in the World, regardless of distance or size. Exhibitors from all parts of the world came to see it. The Campaign Needs You! Join Hands and Help Collect $500,000 By May 16th 1916

Please contribute 10% or more of the receipts of your theatre on National Motion Picture Tribute Day, May 15th, 1916.

The Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund of America solicits your co-operation and help.

Only a few weeks remain—do your share—in helping to raise the $500,000 for the most justifiable endowment that was ever projected—many of our peaceful, kindly profession are in need in their later years and we who have health and strength should help them. The best way to help is by making this endowment sure, and it is our duty to do that—the help of Exhibitors is imperative.

The actor helps everyone—every community in times of calamity but actors have not been helped much. We must set the public a good example and the public will help us endow the Actors' Home and the Actors' Fund. The public will surely pack your theatres on National Motion Picture Tribute Day. Many exhibitors have already agreed to give more than 10% of their particular day.

WILL YOU HELP—WILL YOU GIVE 10%—IF YOU HAVEN'T AGREED PLEASE WRITE OR WIRE NOW SAYING THAT YOU WILL
